The trouble is, no one starts complaining until the problem hits. This gives the authority little backing in seeking a solution from senior government.

That was the indication given one complainant, Roy Baigent of Camilton, at a meeting of the authority's water control advisory committee Tuesday night.

Mr. Baigent, owner of Club Cedara called for action on repair of more dams along the waterway to alleviate the summer drysp.

But committee members told him, the problem wasn't so simply solved. For one things there's the slumbling block of private ownership.

There are six dams between Tweed and Belleville privately owned, said authority chairman Guy Hughes. Some are in "bad need of repair" but are outside the conservation group's jurisdiction.

For five year's, the authority has been pressing for a provincial government policy on such privately-owned structures. So far, there's been no response, he said.

But if more people started complaining to senior politicians it might evoke action.

The authority already has a solution — construction of a big storage reservior at Bend Bay in Huntingdon Township -- a major project estimated to cost about $5 million.

"People don't complain until the water is gone," he said. "We need people, we need letters (of complaint to senior government). It's got to be planned asking — not just when everything is dry."

Dry Spell Heightens Forest Fire Danger

The forest fire hazard is extreme in the parched bush land of the Quinte district's northern township.

This morning, a sustained, week-long heat wave had broken in the Belleville-Trenton area of the Quinte district.

But the hazard rating remained unchanged further north, a natural resources ministry spokesman at Tweed reported.

The threat caused prolonged by the dry weather and marked by severe fire losses — has caused the ministry to reinforce its firefighting crews in its Tweed district and place them on 24-hour alert.

All time off has been cancelled for the units, says Doug Mumford, district fire control supervisor.

"We are sort of prepared for the worst — hoping we don't get it," he said.

But, already fires — feeding on tinder-dry bushland — have destroyed more than four times the average lost for the entire 1974 fire season.

Last year from April to late fall there were 63 fires in the district which destroyed about 590 acres, said the supervisor.

By Tuesday, there already had been 78 fires in the district. These have burned out more than 1,135 acres.

A "good portion" of the fires are caused by campfires left improperly doused, he said.

But thunderstorms — with more lightening than rain — also have been a major problem. Such fires, striking at random in isolated areas, are often difficult for firefighters to reach, said the supervisor.

"There is a very definite need for caution in the outdoors by the public "until the hazard passes, cautioned Mr. Mumford.

He said 10 men had been temposaulyy hired to reinforce the district's two regular firemen firefighting units. Fire wardens — appointed by the ministry as watchdogs in local townships — also are on continuous alert.

Meantime, all burning permits have been cancelled in the district. These are issued to rural residents who want to burn brush or garbage.

No Road Aid Coming Council Tells Residents

By AL ZARAS
Staff Reporter

AMELIASBURG — Residents of the Quinte Shores subdivision near Weller's Bay met a stone wall head-on Tuesday in their attempt to get Ameliasburg Township council to take over a road they say is tearing their cars apart.

A 15-member delegation, representing about 50 home and cottage owners, wants the township to take over a potholed, one-mile stretch of road leading into the 35-lot subdivision.

Delegation spokesmen, armed with an offer of compromise, met with no offer from council to take over the road in its present state.

Discussion in council Tuesday was interspersed with charges council had "snowed" residents and backed away from promises made.

The inconclusiveness of the meeting feels a four-year controversy that one cottage owner said he will take over council's head — to the provincial tanspportation ministry offices in Port Hope and on to Queen's Park.

In an interview Al Steers said he will speak to his home town Toronto provincial member Margaret Busch, MLA for Scarborough-East in an effort to get action. He said he was determined to go over council's head.

Prime spokesman for the group, Joe Belczewski said Quinte Shores' residents "ended up worse than we started." He labelled some council members "unsympathetic".

Delegation action was prompted Tuesday by opposition to recent news the township would take over the road only if residents paid an estimated $250 per lot to upgrade the road to township standards. The township's contribution cost would fall under Local Improvement Act regulations and would be recovered through additional taxation.

A township official said Tuesday the municipality could not find a principle over to whom to charge road improvements. Cost of road upgrading now wanted by residents therefore falls on each lot owners.

Until the road is upgraded to the point at which it is acceptable to council, maintenance costs must be borne by residents.

Residents Angry

Quinte Shores cottage owners Lillian Belczewski from left her husband Joe and Al Steers sat at the Ameliasburgh Township council table Tuesday to ask the municipality to take over a road leading into the subdivision near Weller's Bay. Residents presented an estimated $250 levy for road improvement suggested by council under Local Improvement Act provisions.

MPP Wants Ottawa To Check Oil Prices

PICTON — Because of the federal government's "senseless and totally unrealistic energy price increases" Premier William Davis has announced the introduction of the Gasoline and Fuel Oil Price Freeze Act, says James Taylor, MPP Prince Edward-Lennox.

In a news release this week, Mr. Taylor said the major purpose of the legislation is to place a 90-day temporary freeze on refined petroleum products sold in Ontario to the price levels of June 23. The price freeze was effective midnight, July 3.

Mr. Taylor commented he was "especially elated" by the leadership demonstrated by Ontario in attempting to meet the twin challenges of inflation and recession.

He emphasized two other aspects of premier Davis' statement noting:

"I believe the formation of a one-man Royal Commission to get to the bottom of energy pricing difficulties must not be overlooked."

"The possibility of extending the 90-day freeze is central to the unjustified price increase imposed by Ottawa."

Mr. Taylor observed, "This whole exercise illustrates the immediate necessity to develop a sane energy policy and a long term industrial strategy for Canada."

District at a Glance

Cemetery Improves

PICTON — Town clerk Andrew Jarvis lent new life to a report from the Glenwood Cemetery committee this month when he mentioned work in progress at the grave sites.

He observed there were more men employed this summer to maintain the cemetery in comparison with the skeleton crew hired last year.

Board to Meet

PICTON — The Prince Edward County Planning Board and its consultants will meet Thursday, July 10 to hear a progress report on the Picton-Hallowell secondary plan.

Chairman and members of the Picton planning committee are invited to attend as well as representatives of Hallowell township.

Permit Value Noted

PICTON — Building inspector Morley Brooks has reported permits totalling $383,300 here for the month of June.

Among these is a $300,000 permit issued to Rollins Construction for an 18-unit apartment building on Bridge Street.

Clerk May Move

PICTON — Town clerk Andrew Jarvis may move up in the municipal world if Picton councillors approve expansions at the town offices.

The second floor of the building now rented by the town has become vacant this month and on July 21 council will inspect it to study its potential as a meeting area for committees.

Taxes Due

PICTON — Town clerk Andrew Jarvis Monday told Picton councillors that 37 per cent of the total tax levy for 1975 has been collected to date.

In 1974, 39 per cent of the total levy had been collected by July 7.

Workshop Outlines Restoration Techniques

PICTON — Garbed in a white smock and surrounded by kettles and a package of rice flour, Prince Edward Museum curator James Gooding this week confided his special paste recipe to interested observers.

Actually, the unusual "dish" he prepared Tuesday was a mild paste suitable for use in mounting old drawings.

Assisted by students of museum technology Charles Baird and Donna Midwinter, Mr. Gooding conducted the first in a series of museum workshops on conservation and restoration.

Two drawings of the Old Church of St. Mary Magdalene, dating probably to the 1800s, were found by Prince Edward County clerk Thomas Walker in the the vault at Shire Hall. These sketches, made prior to the addition of the chancel and the bell tower of the church, were mounted to demonstrate technique to interested community residents attending the workshop.

Mr. Gooding and Miss Midwinter also demonstrated how the heavy card-board backing of old photographs may be removed to permit remounting.

Horse Show July 13

SOPHIASBURG — The Sophiasburg Riding Club will hold its final show of the season on Sunday, July 13 at the farm of Lyle Mitchell, Bethel Road.

Classes begin at 1 p.m. with the English pleasure division and small and medium chariot races open to all entrants.

Recipe for Success

Park Assaults Reported

OUTLET PARK — The Picton detachment of the Ontario Provincial Police is investigating the alleged indecent assault of three women at outlet Provincial Park early today.

Community services officer, Constable Donald Watt, said names of the women, residents of the Belleville-Trenton area, are being withheld at this time. The incident occurred at 1 a.m.

Grass Fire Minor

ROSSMORE — Ameliasburg Fire Department was called to the Melbond farm near to Tobe's Country Gardens here to deal with a grass fire Tuesday.

A spokesman said the fire of undetermined origin was located behind the residence and required only a half hour to quell. The fire, which started at about 3 p.m., did not damage surrounding buildings.

Car Buffs Gather

PICTON — The Antique and Classic Car Club of Canada, Upper Canada Region, will hold its second annual show at Vince's Farmers Market on Glenora Road on Saturday, July 19.

Approximately 50 exhibitors are expected for the show which will feature a flea market and auction for old car parts.

CENTRAL FLORIDA

Gas Prices Decline

PICTON — President of the Prince Edward Chamber of Commerce, Sheldon Whitaker, this week told directors gasoline prices in Picton have been lowered.

Mr. Whitaker said some local retail outlets are selling gas at 73.9 cents per gallon, about six cents below prices at other stations.

Recently the Prince Edward Chamber of Commerce invited representatives of several gas stations and oil companies to meet with directors to discuss the price of gasoline in the county. For some time the price in Picton and outlying areas has been about 10 cents more per gallon than in Belleville, Trenton and Marysville.

"Perhaps the work of the Chamber of Commerce was not in vain," commented Mr. Whitaker, referring to its inquiry into gas prices here.

Crashing the Diplomatic Cocktail Circuit in Ottawa Has Become Quite an Art

By RICHARD JACKSON

OTTAWA — You probably aren't going to believe this, but it's straight, mate.

There are a few social showboaters in town who free-load their grog and groceries every night of the week except perhaps on a quiet Sunday.

All they need is a decently tailored and pressed lounge suit, preferably in businessman's blue — on some occasions, a black tie — a presentable appearance — and a casually knowing manner.

They are wired into the diplomatic cocktail circle so tightly they know every night who is pouring the martinis and serving the canapes in what embassy and across town.

And it's the truth, Ruth, that there are so many such soirees — the diplomatic community now being 1,100 strong — that these slick social clowns can look over the evening's list and pick the very best.

They don't get to go to the intimate little 16-course, eight-place dinners — too exclusive — but it's no trick to crash the big bash.

When police rope off the street for the parking of the big black diplomatic limousines, the uniformed chauffeurs loll in the shade of lawn trees in summer, or keep their motors running in winter, and the doorman hands the ladies out of waves of taxis pulling up the driveway — well, man, that is the tipoff there is a martini mob scene in the making.

The booze will be as good as at the every little goodies, even if there will be no caviar — and the groceries — little sandwiches, tiny fishes on toast fingers, miniaturized sausages, butter claws and other goodies — will be as tasty if not as elaborately served.

There will be no shortage of good liquor and fine food. Ever.

And with scores and often hundreds of guests milling around, the chit-chat loud enough to scare the pigeons off Parliament Hill, even the uninvited can blend, unnoticed, into the scene for fun and frolic.

Benjamin Rogers, Chief of Protocol for the Department of External Affairs, provides confirmation of what I just about everybody in the National Capital long has suspected if not known for certain — that there are literally "hundreds upon hundreds" of cocktail parties roaring along at the various levels of the diplomatic strata each year.

So many, in fact, that it becomes a bit of a bore.

You see, the diplomat comes socially well prepared with an entertainment allowance generously calculated to uphold the prestige of the government back home, and you, the ever-generous taxpayer, do your helpful little thing by carrying the tax he doesn't have to pay on the glorious alcoholic irrigations.

It makes for oceans of cheap — but excellent quality, nothing-but-the-best — booze.

And awards Ottawa the station crown as the country's heavyweight drinking champion — or so says Statistics.

So for the diplomat it becomes work, not pleasure, this merry go-round ritual of invitations, visiting cards, and cocktails.

Some get three and four invitations an evening, and, chides Protocol Chief Rogers, "It's not elegant to decline."

But after a certain number of soirees, the fun goes out of the thing after the third martini, and choking it down becomes a chore.

Horror !it says here!.

Now hear this — there are 30 embassy attaches posted here, eight of them from Communist countries, and another 40, stationed in Washington, make regular social calls in the Canadian Capital on occasion.

No major world espionage conspiracies have broken here since Igor Gouzenko betrayed the Soviet masters — North American spy network based in the Russian embassy here.

From time to time, diplomats are diplomatically given the book by External Affairs for Conduct "inimical to Canadian security."

And National Defence Headquarters recently felt compelled to warn Armed Forces brass to limit their drinking and chatter when bending elbows at cocktail capers in the bearing of Warsaw Pact military attaches. The NDHQ memo underlined that not all Communist diplomatic personnel in Ottawa necessarily are trusted members of the Canadian service messes.

But outside that select military circle, West and East, almost everything and everybody goes to the diplomatic circuit.

The Busy Harbor Scene

The harbor scene is unsurpassed these days. With Belleville's expanded docking facilities, there are more boats than ever tied up at the waterfront.

The Fourth of July holiday in the U.S. brought its annual crop of visitors from across the lake and among both visiting and home-based vessels there is greater variety than ever before.

From Victoria Park looking across to the Four Seasons and Zwick's Island there is a good view of the new park complex under development. Trees have been planted along the water's edge, the soil preparation is smoothly-contoured, and the shape of things to come is easily discernible.

It's difficult to imagine what the area was like a few years ago. Yes, it was the city dump.

In years to come, along with the enduring and popular Zwick's Island which itself grew from a landfill operation years ago, there will be in that area one of the finest marine and park complexes anywhere.

Billie Jean's Great Win

Billie Jean King is the greatest . . . the greatest woman tennis player of her time.

There has never been much doubt of it, but with her devastating win over Evonne Goolagong Cawley at Wimbledon last week, Mrs. King closed the door finally on all her rivals.

At 31, Mrs. King has won her sixth Wimbledon singles title — equalling the celebrated Suzanne Lenglen's record — and aside from continuing doubles competition and World Team Tennis play for New York Sets, is calling it quits.

Both Mrs. King and the game she has served with such distinction have come a long way since her first Wimbledon appearance in 1961. She shared a room then for $1.20 a night and ate only hamburgers and french fries. Today, she says "we're treated like pop stars."

Mrs. King has had a lot to do with that, being a driving force in popularizing the game and raising the status of the players.

Her own style of all-court play, especially in the realm of rerve-and volley, has been the nemesis of many an opponent for years. Her competitive edge and fighting spirit would carry her through even on days when she was off her game; and that was not often.

For Mrs. Cawley and 1974 champion Chris Evert, this Wimbledon was their last opportunity to get past Mrs. King. It was not to be — and all the more ironic by reason of the score in these and previous encounters. In both last year's epic Forest Hills (U.S. Open) final against Mrs. Cawley and this year's Wimbledon semifinal against Miss Evert, Mrs. King came from 0-3 in the final set to win.

It's as Mrs. Cawley, the 23-year-old Australian who beat Billie Jean on the way to the 1971 Wimbledon title, said after Forest Hills last year: "I don't know why they call Billie Jean the 'old lady' "

Black Power At Wimbledon

A black power salute at Wimbledon!

It came from Arthur Ashe after he had disposed handily of Jimmy Connors, the kid from Belleville, Illinois, who had been expected to walk off with the title for the second year running.

Somehow it didn't seem the place for political symbolism and it seemed out of character for Ashe, a modest enough man at the best of times.

Ashe compounded this show of political and personal arrogance by giving Connors the most cursory of handshakes — and that after the raised and clenched fist to the crowd. It was the kind of behavior Ashe accuses Connors of. Of course Ashe has reason enough. Connors has a suit against Ashe for allegedly calling him "brash" and "unpatriotic," a reference apparently to Connors' reluctance to play for the United States Davis Cup team.

Politics aside though, it was a fine win by Ashe. Althea Gibson did it for black women two years running in 1957-58. Now this title for a male compatriot. Miss Gibson, incidentally, now plays professional golf and was a competitor in that recent tourney at St. Georges in Toronto.

For Jimmy Connors things are at rather a low point. In addition to losing his Wimbledon title, he and Chris Evert, who lost hers, are no longer seeing each other. Staying at the top in tennis is probably tough enough without keeping real love matches going.

While Governments Bicker Population Growth Threatens to Outstrip Food Output

The Christian Science Monitor

Hard decisions lie ahead for world leaders who must deal with the rock-and-a-hard-place dilemma of population and food production.

Unfortunately the bickering between "have" and "have-not" countries, which characterized last week's World Food Council meeting in Rome, showed little grounds for optimism that a consensus for international action will quickly be found.

Meanwhile, as many as 10 million persons are thought likely to fall victim to starvation this year, and another half billion — one out of 8 of the globe's 4 billion persons — will endure serious undernourishment.

True, not all is negative on the world food front. The emphasis of the food council meeting in Rome was on increasing the agricultural production capacity of food-short countries, rather than on merely increasing aid from the food-rich lands. An International Agriculture Development Fund is being formed to finance agricultural production in the "third world." Study projects are under way to increase supplies of fertilizer, to improve water management and irrigation in areas like West Africa and India. Weather conditions have been largely favorable this year in the Northern Hemisphere, so grain reserves are expected to be ample.

But these more positive signs should not be permitted to mask the staring and malnutrition suffered at this very moment, or the danger of widespread famine that could be touched off by altered weather trends, political instability in certain populous countries, or simple population overload as world population continues its climb toward 6 billion persons in the next two decades.

Some responsible food authorities, whose task it is to make international food relief and production efforts work, complain that too much is made of the political posturing and conflict at meetings like last week's in Rome. They argue that expectations should not be set too high. Indeed, Adekke Boerma, head of the UN Food and Agriculture Organization, told the Rome parley the goal of banishing world hunger by 1985 is unrealistic.

But how for should expectations be scaled down? As far down as "triage" — a now widely discussed term for progress.

Fortunately, our social progress has brought about a realization of the majesty of life even partially broken that each human being enjoys.

Thanks to people such as Jean Vanier, son of the former Canadian governor-general, and vigorous opponents of impersonal society, we are learning to love and help the young and old mentally handicapped who have been shunted aside for too long by the big machine called people.

Fortunately, our social progress has brought about a realization of the majesty of life even partially broken that each human being enjoys.

Thanks to people such as Jean Vanier, son of the former Canadian governor-general, and vigorous opponents of impersonal society, we are learning to love and help the young and old mentally handicapped who have been shunted aside for too long by the big machine called progress.

. . . The mentally handicapped must begin to feel in homes and in special schools that we are making room for them, that we are giving them a place in the sun.

They must be allowed to breathe and to feel free when amongst us.

This is a powerful challenge for all of us and a measure of those grandiose ideals we espouse such as the just, human and personal society.

Senior Citizens and the Handicapped

Sherbrooke La Tribune

We like to describe our day-to-day lives with the verbs to produce, to accumulate wealth, to be busy and sometimes, as a distraction, to love.

Yet far very few days is often confronted with contradictions in real life.

Every single day, in our daily living, we often strive to hard for our own places in the sun that it becomes too easy to ignore callously the physically or mentally handicapped senior citizens or lonely people.

The Congress of Tucuman of United Provinces of the Rio de la Plata formally declared Independence from Spain 159 years ago—in 1816—founding what became the republic of Argentina.

The independence movement was promoted by British adventurers, to take over the colony in 1806.

1810 — Napoleon united Holland with France.

1860 — Massacre of Christians at Damascus began.

Vanity of Varities: Are Men Jealous?

Boston Globe

The late Cleveland Amory, author who wrote unorthodox books about the miseries of the earth, once penned this line:

"In every age, the wise men have always been wrong."

In every age, including this one, the wise men have agreed that the outstanding characteristic of woman is vanity.

Their obvious point is that women diet to keep thin, use cosmetics on their faces, think about clothes a lot and and sometimes go to great lengths to decorate their persons.

But just suppose, in defiance of the wise men, that the motive for such preoccupation is not vanity, but humility, a feeling of inadequacy and a wistful desire for self-improvement?

Now men, as a rule, are not accused of vanity.

But suppose man is really the vain one, who thinks the Lord created him without need for any improvement? His written rule is that any male who decorates his face, except maybe with the beard or mustache, is probably pretty queer. After he has bathed and put on a necktie, man assumes he is all set to go to the party and give the girls a treat.

Are the wise men right when they say women are vain because they try hard to improve their nature, whereas men aren't because they don't see that they require any decoration?

Norwegian Oil Boom

Brockville Recorder and Times

While Britons are anxiously looking to the arrival of North Sea oil as their salvation from the worst of an economic catastrophe, the Norwegians are just as anxiously wondering if they are going to be able to get their share of the bonanza and how it's going to affect their society.

Because it can use only a fraction of the oil it can drill, Norway should be able to export all but 10 million tons of its projected 50-million-ton annual output from Ekofisk, the first of several rich fields lying astride the British-Norwegian boundary dividing the North Sea that is expected to begin flowing this summer.

Norway stands to earn at least $4 billion annually from oil exports.

Teacher Salaries

Editor,
The Intelligencer:

W.J. Curtis, in his recent letter concerning teacher salaries, said that the 40 who opted for rejection of the proposal by the Economic Policy Committee (EPC) "perpetuated the pernicious stench of greed". Tuk! Tuk! It was not greed that motivated these teachers but the sincere and professional conviction that the proposal by the EPC was not adequate in the areas of salary, fringe benefits and working conditions.

Mr. Curtis quotes the percentage increases at the maximums of the Teacher-Five Principal grid (Level 5) as follows: Effective to December — (level 1) 22.0; (level 2) 22.6; (level 3) 23.2; (level 4) 23.5; (level 5) 20.9; (level 6) 20.9; (level 7) 22.3; and (B) January to August — (level 1) 16.1; (level 2) 16.5; (level 3) 23.6; (level 4) 23.3; (level 5) 22.6; (level 6) 22.3; (level 7) 22.3. The average September to December increase is 21.8 per cent, and January, and the average January to August increase is 24.6 per cent at maximum.

The Economic Policy Committee stated that this would mean an increase in excess of 28.0 per cent for the teacher and vice principals. How can this be true when the majority of this group is already at these maximums? Why did the E.P.C. not bring this fact emphatically to the attention of the E.P.C.? Why were .also exclusions from the other A.S.G. surveys, with the exception of the North Hastings A.S.G. survey, suppressed from the E.P.C. and denied by the E.P.C. chairman to the Press?

The final placed on the grid in January will give teachers $315 by August. As a percentage of a salary of $10,000 these amounts (4.0 per cent and 2.4 per cent respectively) represent much less than a cost of living adjustment (COLA). Inflation due to increased food, housing, fuel costs, etc. is a more substantiate these adjustments.

A HASTINGS TEACHER.

Volunteers Available

Oshawa Times

A small success story:

A few weeks ago an appeal went out from the Oshawa branch of the Ontario Humane Society for volunteers to help in the operation of the animal shelter on John Street. The shelter, which at one time had been able to pay a full-time worker, had reached the point where it had no funds for staff and so few volunteers that it was only a very part-time operation and was in danger of having to close completely. That would have meant primarily that a few cats who might as a last chance at life been found a home would either have remained wild (so to speak) or been exterminated.

Now the society reports that it has received offers from 60 people who are willing to volunteer time to keep the service going.

They Served in the Navy

Letter in The Montreal Gazette

The article on page 9 of the June 19 issue, under the headline "Silent service spawns food-mouthed admirals," is not altogether accurate and in my opinion most unfortunate and unfair.

The headline itself is say the least is lacking in dignity. The writer is referring to men with strong feelings who had the courage to speak out. The use of the term "food-mouthed" which has a disparaging connotation.

The reference to Rear-Admiral Hose includes the wording ". . . father of the Canadian Navy, forever of the same mind." It is chief of the naval staff . . . I do not wish in any way to detract from the reference to the contribution and reputation of this fine officer. But the author was certainly careless when he cited his honourable Admiral Hose took over in 1920, whereas the RCN was formed in 1910 when Admiral C.E. Kingsmill was appointed chief of naval service.

The quotation from a Royal Naval historian is interesting and perhaps amusing, but surely it is out-dated. And the author's use of the quotation suggests that the men to whom he has referred may not have been seasoned by the sea.

I believe, and I feel that many who had the privilege of knowing these men or who learned about them will agree, that it was not only a distinctly unfortunate in having senior naval officers who were professional seamen in the highest sense of the term who also had the courage to speak out publicly when they felt that the service which was so close to their hearts was in any way threatened.

C.G. Kingmill.

Traffic Check

Traffic study of vehicles entering and leaving Prince Edward County continued Tuesday on Highway 14 at Roiksmere. Gathering data to assist in current project to find suitable alternative to swing-bridge link across the Bay of Quinte, the survey was launched Sunday to gather statistics on summer travel. Tuesday was expected to give better analysis of commuter flow across bridge from Belleville. Surveys will also be held next Sunday and Tuesday at other strategic highway points in county.

Floating Along

Away from hectic summer jobs working on the carnival midway, Frank Phillipo, 15, and Bill Rankin, right, also 15, explored Belleville and the bay area near Zwick's Island by raft. For two long, lazy weeks these high school students from Toronto will enjoy Quinte fun and sun until rejoining the carnival in Ottawa.

Mixup Shortens Tourist Booth Hours

Four young people operating the Marmora tourist information booth have run into a problem which has resulted in a decision to reduce the number of hours that booth will operate.

In reporting on the situation to Marmora village council this week evening, Councillor Gordon Bennett said two of the youths, from Madoc, had indicated they were unable to come to Marmora to help in the operation of the booth because they needed the time to work on a history of Madoc.

Preparation of a history on Madoc and Marmora and operation of information booth were combined in the application the young people made for an Opportunities for You OFY grant.

Mr. Bennett said he was asked to attend a meeting last Wednesday with the four young people and the OFY projects manager to discuss the situation and learned from him that the tourist information booth was not mentioned in the contract the government had given him.

Mr. Bennett said he felt the young people had been misled adding that two projects had been married which shouldn't have been.

It was decided that Jim Airhart and Anita Wisti would operate the booth on weekends. The new hours are 1:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. on Friday and noon to 5:00 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday.

Ditch Angers Residents

A delegation of four residents attended the Marmora Village Council this week to protest a drainage ditch along the east side of Cameron Street directly behind their properties which front on Forsyth Street.

The delegation consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Brady, Mrs. Norma Darrah and Mrs. Ellenore Barker. They complained that the ditch will be a detriment to selling the back portion of their property.

The ditch has always been a source of bad odor and insects, Mrs. Darrah complained. The delegation accused council of not looking after their interests by not making sure the situation was corrected while the sewage and water installation was carried out on Cameron Street.

Mrs. Brady said they were told by one employee of Clairson Construction Co. that the ditch would be put in on the west side of CameronStreet and a few minutes later the engineer had come to her and said that was wrong and it would be on the east side.

Mrs. Barker asked why the drainage ditch couldn't be tiled and covered over. When council explained that it would cost $3,000 she commented that it would have to be done sooner or later.

Council agreed to an on-site inspection of the area Monday following a meeting with the ministry of environment representative, and the project engineer.

Governments To Monitor Water Supply

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government signed an agreement with Ontario Tuesday to operate jointly a network of 4 stations to monitor water supply in the province, a day after Ontario said it would not enter further shared-cost programs with Ottawa.

But Ontario Resources Minister Leo Bernier told a news conference that the two governments are already informally operating the network. The agreement only made the arrangement formal.

Environment Minister Jeanne Sauve said the system is "very important for planning development of a river basin."

She said that agreements have been reached with most other provinces on operating similar stations.

The federal government will assume all construction and maintenance costs for federal stations and Ontario will pay all provincial station costs.

A third group of stations will be operated jointly by the federal and provincial governments.

Extends Route

OTTAWA (CP) — The Journal says a government study recommends the Ottawa River be opened from Ottawa to Lake Temiskaming to provide a 250-mile route for pleasure boats.

The newspaper says the two-year, $40,000 study commissioned by the public works department estimates enough pleasure craft would use a system to bypass the existing dams and rapids to repay a marine railway's cost within 10 years.

Star to Publish

MONTREAL (CP) — The Star will publish today for the first time since a strike halted publication of the afternoon daily newspaper May 30, a newspaper spokesman said Tuesday. Members of Local 111 of the Newspaper Guild voted 197-53 Saturday to accept the newspaper's wage offer of an increase of 18.5 per cent over a 15-month period. The 450 employees had demanded a 24-per-cent wage increase over one year.

Morgentaler Recovers

SHERBROOKE, Que. (CP) — Dr. Henry Morgentaler is "progressing well" and will be sent to a rehabilitation centre for coronary patients within a week, Dr. Bertrand Dumais of the University of Sherbrooke's medical centre said Tuesday. Dr. Morgentaler was taken to hospital in Granby, Que., June 16, and transferred to the Sherbrooke centre June 18, after suffering chest pains at the Waterloo Detention Centre where he has been serving an 18-month sentence for having performed an illegal abortion.

Pregnancy Okay

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pregnant women will be allowed to stay in the United States armed forces under new rules already issued by the U.S. Air Force and being written by the Army, Navy and Marine Corps, the Pentagon said Monday. Under a policy outlined in 1951, pregnant women received an automatic discharge unless they got waivers based on a showing that their children or military duties would not be neglected if they stayed in the forces.

Pills to Stay

LEEDS, England (AP) — British doctors have voted to continue giving out free contraceptives under the state-run National Health Service after being told they would look "fuddy-duddy" and "middle-aged" if they di not. About 600 agreed if the vote. About 400 doctors at the Association's annual conference Tuesday narrowly favored the move after Dr. Jean Lawrie said otherwise, the public would view doctors as "a fuddy-duddy collection of middle-aged men who are really not interested in the welfare of total families."

Workers Demonstrate

OTTAWA (CP) — Representatives of the 3,000-member Dockyards Trades and Labor Council demonstrated on Parliament Hill and before federal offices Tuesday, protesting a breakdown in contract talks with the government. The employees, who work in federal dockyards on the east and west coasts, have been holding rotating strikes since June 3 after a failure to reach a new agreement with the treasury board.

OUR BOARDING HOUSE with Major Hoople

Signs Contract

MONTREAL (CP) — Canac Consultants Ltd., a subsidiary of Canadian National Railways, has signed a $3-million contract with the government of Brazil for a study aimed at modernization of its Federal Railway System, which operates 30,000 freight and 2,500 passenger cars over 15,000 miles of track. The company said Tuesday work on the project, involving a 28-man team, will begin in Rio de Janeiro this fall and take 13 months to complete. The contract increases Canac's business volume since its inception in 1971 to more than $15 million.

Operates at Loss

WOLFSBURG, West Germany (AP) — After a record $323-million loss in 1974, Volkswagen operated at a loss again during the first half of 1975, general manager Toni Schumacher said Tuesday. He said he expected "a clear loss" for the year, but told stockholders he was optimistic about a profit in 1976 provided there were no setbacks. In the first half of 1975, the company sold 1.2 million vehicles, up 10.6 per cent from last year, but almost 10 per cent below 1973. Declining exports, a weaker U.S. dollar and higher costs caused the negative results, he said.

Miners Strike

TORONTO (CP) — About 15,600 miners and production workers at two International Nickel Co. of Canada Ltd. facilities in Ontario will go on strike midnight Wednesday night unless a settlement between the United Steelworkers of America and the company is reached, a union representative says.

The joint bargaining committee of Local 6500 and Local 6300 notified its members Tuesday that a strike has been authorized at Sudbury and Port Colborne, the spokesman said.

Mini-budget Popular

TORONTO (CP) — The Ontario treasury ran out of its first 3,000 copies of the mini-budget Tuesday.

"There's never been such a popular book," said one official.

Printed for Monday's presentation, the 50-page booklet were grabbed up before the ministry was able to supply those on its official mailing list or the government book shop.

A ministry spokesman said a second printing should be available by Friday.

Meters Removed

TORONTO (CP) — Traffic meters used to regulate traffic at access points to the Queen Elizabeth Way in Mississauga, Ont., 15 miles west of here, have been ordered removed, Transportation Minister John Rhodes said in the legislature Tuesday. The meters backed up traffic last weekend and caused more problems than they solved, he said. "There've been some lengthy traffic delays so (the lights) will be removed."

Passes Test

TORONTO (CP) — Inspection last April of a hotel in Guelph, Ont., where two persons died in a fire Monday showed the hotel passed all requirements, Sidney Handleman, minister of consumer and commercial relations, told the legislature Tuesday. He said the inspection by the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario (LLBO) as agents for the fire marshal's office turned up only "one minor work order," to be completed by September, 1976.

Program Doomed

TORONTO (CP) — The Ontario government's proposed a cost-of stabilization program is doomed to "total and absolute failure," Pat Reid (L—Rainy River) told the legislature Tuesday. He told Allan Grossman, secretary for resource development, that the province has not offered enough money to sweeten the plan.

Chrysler Team Promises Growth

DETROIT (AP) — A new management team hand-picked by the outgoing chairman is ready to take over at Chrysler Corp. with promises to steer the troubled auto company toward financial health.

"We're realistic about our problems, but we're also very confident about the future at Chrysler," John Riccardo, the next chairman, said Tuesday.

"We're very optimistic by what we see in the marketplace and expect solid growth and considerable improvements in sales."

Riccardo, 51, company president since 1970, succeeds Lynn Townsend, 54, who is taking early retirement Oct. 1 after nearly nine years as Chrysler's chief executive.

Riccardo will be succeeded as president by executive vice-president Eugene Cafiero, 46, now the firm's No. 2 man.

The new management team was approved Tuesday at a special meeting of the firm's board of directors in New York.

The board accepted the retirement of Townsend, who has come under fire because of the firm's dwindling sales and heavy losses—$176 million since last summer.

Riccardo, a Townsend protege who becomes the sixth chairman in the firm's 50-year history, told reporters that cost-cutting policies initiated by Townsend are pulling the company out of the red.

He said there would be no immediate or sharp departure from the course set by his predecessor. "There may be new decisions in the future as market conditions change."

Riccardo, 18a Townsend a former accountant, has worked under Townsend since joining Chrysler in 1959. Both men previously were at Touche, Ross and Co., an accounting firm. Townsend, who came to Chrysler in 1957, brought Riccardo aboard.

Cafiero, who rose through the automotive ranks, joined Chrysler in 1952. He served as a plant manager and later as vice-president of various automotive operations until last December, when he was leap-frogged over several senior associates to become executive vice-president.

Two MPPs Want Strike Amendment

TORONTO (CP) — A Liberal and a New Democrat joined Tuesday to move an amendment to proposed Ontario legislation that the right to strike be extended to school principals and vice-principals.

Donald Deacon (L—Toronto-York Centre) and James Foulds (NDP—Port Arthur) co-authored an amendment to Education Minister Thomas Wells' policy regulating collective bargaining between school boards and teachers.

The legislation would give teachers the right to strike but exclude principals and vice-principals on grounds they perform essential services.

The amendment was not expected to come to a vote today as the committee hears presentations from teacher and trustee groups.

When it comes to a vote, Mr. Wells says he is confident the committee's Progressive Conservative majority will support his view.

Various teacher groups spoke against clause 65 of the bill, which excludes principals and vice-principals from the strike sanction, but Mr. Wells held ground.

"I don't accept the arguments put forward at all. They are in the long run downgrading the future role of the principal."

Son Wants Help, Parents Addicted

Dear Ann Landers: We keep hearing lectures and reading articles for parents who need to know how to help their children get off drugs. I have a different kind of question. What can children do to help parents who become addicted? I am not speaking about pot or LSD or heroin. I'm referring to a nice, respectable middle-aged couple in the suburbs who are hooked on barbiurates and amphetamines.

My mother and dad have a medicine chest full of Seconal, Tuinal, Nembutal, barbital, phenabarbital and Eskatrol.

I'm sure they would be highly insulted if anyone suggested that they were drug addicts. When I told my mother amphetamines were "speed" she said, "Don't be silly."

My dad insists he can't get a night's sleep without pills. They both seem to think they are in no danger because the drugs are prescribed by our family doctor. What can I do to help them? — Concerned Son

Dear SON: Call your family doctor and ask him if he is aware that your parents are addicted. HE is the one who should handle this problem — and I hope he does, promptly.

Dear Ann Landers: I have read with interest several letters in your column from widows whose husbands have very little life insurance, or in some cases none at all. Some of those widows were bitter because their husbands had not "planned ahead." But in my case, I was the guilty party.

Every time our agent suggested that Mei increase his insurance, I came out with that stupid remark, "We're insurance poor." The truth was that I, like so many other wives, thought my husband would live forever. Widowhood was something that happened to other women. Today, I'm that other woman.

Last week, while going through my husband's desk drawers I came across an insurance proposal for $40,000 of life insurance. It was dated five months before Mei died. It was a good plan and we could have afforded it. Our agent was trying to help and I knew it, but Mei was in perfect health and I figured I could use that $81.57 a month toward a new color TV.

Today, I'm working in a steak restaurant trying to keep my family together. Believe me, it's tough. I hope you will print this letter for the benefit of all those wives out there who don't appreciate the immance assistance widows do. Sign me — Kicking Myself in Winnipeg-Salem.

Dear Friend: Twenty-twenty hindsight is easy. The family that looks ahead and makes provisions for the long shots is the one that sleeps better at night. I'm sorry your husband didn't override your veto. Good luck to you, dear.

Dear Ann Landers: Your column touches people's lives in ways your will never know. You touched mine recently and I want to thank you. It was your answer to the person who asked if it was in poor taste to send a note of condolence to a woman whose husband had committed suicide.

You said, "By all means write to the bereaved widow at once. She needs to hear from family and friends at this critical time."

Often when a husband takes his life, the widow wonders if people think perhaps their marriage was bad — that if she had been a better wife she could have prevented the tragedy. Thank God my family and friends didn't think that why a year ago. — N.J. Widow

Dear Friend: I appreciate your confirmation. Only one who has been there knows what it's like.

Life Difficult if You Can't Speak English

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Spanish mother buys a particularly expensive brand of milk. A Chilean immigrant won't use a coin laundry. An Italian enters hospital and finds himself with enormous medical bills.

These people share a common problem. They speak no English.

The woman can't read the labels, the Chilean an't read directions at the laundry and no one has bothered to explain medical coverage to the Italian.

"We take so much for granted in our day-to-day life that we really can't understand how difficult a simple thing like shopping—particularly food shopping—can be to the non-English speaking person," said Rosemary Gill, coordinator of Multilingual Social Services.

Her group and a second, Language Aid for Ethnic Groups, were created to try solving the problems of non-English-speaking people in Vancouver. They began three years ago under Local Initiative Programs and funding was extended until they were taken over by the B.C. department of human resources.

All staff speak two languages and know the ethnic backgrounds. The informal store-front offices receive more than 1,000 inquiries each month.

Major problems of ethnic groups are employment, housing and immigration, all hampered by lack of English. Even those who have been here for some time require counselling when their children become totally Canadianized and a cultural gap forms.

Rosemary Gill says women at home, lonely and missing their families, are hurt most.

"Their daughters are dating and they remember how it was 20 years ago in their country and what they see now just blows their minds," she said.

"On the other hand, you get the kids who are ashamed of their parents because of the controls forced by them, their lack of English and their foreign culture."

She has organized a group of Punjabi mothers who gather to talk about their problems.

"Their way of life was changing even back in their village and now we must instruct them on the Canadian way of life, our attitudes and even our school system."

Other non-English-speaking groups will soon be formed, she said.

Michiko Sakata, co-ordinator at Language Aid, says her group serves in another area.

"We serve the Skid Road and Chinatown area where many elderly live alone and are without friends or relatives.

"They're an isolated group of people and need assistance obtaining pensions, pharmacare, minimum income, rental grants and bus passes. Their housing is terrible and we have to check the sick in hotels and rooms and shop for them—we have a lot of home visits. We charter buses and take them out."

Miss Sakata says the elderly in the area are exposed to abuse because everyone knows when they receive their cheques. Sometimes they are attacked on the streets or in their rooms.

"We get them to bank their money and we work with community groups to improve housing so the seniors can live safely. Their rooms are unsanitary and there's no dignity in their dwellings. These people have worked all their lives and there's no excuse for them living this way," she said.

"The general public has to realize that this country is made up of many races and nationalities. The public just presumes that everyone speaks English—this country is multilingual."

Versatile Salmon Can be Economical or Elegant

Salmon — in a can, it's economical; served in steaks, it's elegant.

Try our different and tastetempting recipes using British Columbia canned and frozen salmon.

Layered Salmon Casserole

one can B.C. salmon ½ cup instant rice
one can kernel corn
two tsps. salt
one can (19 oz.) stewed tomatoes one can (10 oz.) whole mushrooms, drained
¼ cup buttered bread crumbs
Green pepper rings

Flake salmon, including bones and crushed bones. Place rice in a 1½-qt. casserole dish and top with kernel corn, including juice. Sprinkle with salt. Layer half the stewed tomatoes over top. Then layer the mushrooms, followed by the flaked salmon and top with remaining stewed tomatoes. Sprinkle with buttered bread crumbs and crush bones. Prepare noodles Romanoff according to package directions using two-thirds cup milk instead of the one-third cup specified. Combine salmon (including crushed bones and juice), cottage cheese and chives. Stir salmon mixture into noodles and place in 1½-quart casserole. Cover and bake in 350 degrees F. oven for 15 to 20 minutes. Serves four.

Salmon Casserole a la Romanoff

one can (7¾ oz.) B.C. Salmon one package noodles Romanoff two-thirds cup milk
¼ cup cottage cheese
one tbsp. chopped chives

Flake salmon and crush bones. Prepare noodles Romanoff according to package directions using two-thirds cup milk instead of the one-third cup specified. Combine salmon (including crushed bones and juice), cottage cheese and chives. Stir salmon mixture into noodles and place in 1½-quart casserole. Cover and bake in 350 degrees F. oven for 15 to 20 minutes. Serves four.

Biscuit-Topped Salmon Casserole

two cans (7¾ oz. each) B.C. salmon one can (10 oz.) Cheddar cheese soup
½ cup liquid (salmon liquid plus light cream or canned milk to make volume)
¾ cup frozen peas
½ package refrigerator biscuits
one teaspoon parsley flakes or dill weed

Drain salmon, reserving juice. Flake salmon and crush bones. In a saucepan, combine cheddar cheese soup and ½ cup liquid. Blend well. Stir in salmon (including crushed bones) and peas. Heat through. Place mixture in greased 11-quart casserole and top with ready-to-bake biscuits. Sprinkle with parsley or dill weed. Bake at 450 degrees F. for 20 minutes or until biscuits are golden brown and baked through.

Salmon and Fruit Casserole

three cans (7¾ oz. each) B.C. salmon ½ cup cooked brown long grain rice three small fresh apricots (or one medium peach), peeled and diced one cup green seedless grapes, halved ½ teaspoon celery seed
¼ teaspoon nutmeg

Flake salmon with its juice, mashing the bones. Add remaining ingredients and mix well. Pack into a 1-quart casserole dish. Casserole can be unmoulded onto lettuce leaves and served cold; or bake at 350 degrees F. for 30-35 minutes to serve hot. Serves two.

Open - Faced Salmon Sandwich

one can (3¾-oz.) B.C. salmon two tbsps. chopped celery one tbsp. sliced radish or carrot seasoned salt to taste one slice whole wheat bread one leaf lettuce chopped chives.

Flake salmon with its juice, mashing the bones. Mix with celery, radish, and seasoned salt. Spread bread with margarine; top with lettuce leaf; spread the salmon mixture; sprinkle with chopped chives to taste. Cut in half to serve. Serves one.

Picnic Salmon Loaf

two cans (7¾ oz. each) or one can (15½-oz.) B.C. salmon one loaf day-old sandwich bread (unsliced) two tsps. lemon juice
one tbsp. chopped green pepper
½ cup finely chopped celery
½ tsp. salt
½ cup (approximately) mayonnaise two tbsps. sliced green olives (optional)
three chopped hard-cooked eggs

To assemble loaf: With a very sharp knife, remove the crusts from a loaf of bread to make an even, box-shaped loaf. Cut a lengthwise slice from the top. Hollow out the centre of the loaf (be sure to leave the sides and bottom at least ½ inch thick). Place on cookie sheet.

Filling: In a bowl mix the flaked salmon, lemon juice, chopped green pepper, chopped celery, salt, mayonnaise, green olives and chopped hard-cooked eggs. Fill the hollowed bread with the salmon mixture. Cover with the slice of bread. Cover with topping (recipe follows).

Topping

one envelope unflavored gelatin
one tbsp. white vinegar
one cup mayonnaise
¼ tsp. Worcestershire sauce
½ teaspoon Tabasco
Garnish
Strips of green pepper
Slice of hard-cooked egg
Black Olive sliced in half

Mix gelatin with vinegar; dissolve over hot water. Slowly stir in mayonnaise, add seasonings.

Spread top and sides of loaf with the topping mixture working quickly so the mixture will not set. Garnish with the slice of hard-cooked egg, green pepper strips and halved black olive. Over the finished loaf with wax paper to prevent discoloration of topping. Refrigerate 12 hours before serving. (Do not freeze.)

Crumb Coated Salmon Steaks

Make your own crumb coating:
one cup very fine bread crumbs
¼ cup flour
¼ tsp. sugar
1 tsp. paprika
¼ tsp. white pepper
½ tsp. salt
½ teaspoon thyme OR rosemary

Blend all ingredients together four salmon steaks, cut 1-1½" thick

Butter, melted
Lemon juice

Sprinkle Salmon Steaks lightly with lemon juice. Brush with melted butter and coat with the crumb mix. Place fish in well-greased, hinged wire basket or on well-greased grill. Cook over medium-hot coals for approximately 5 to 8 minutes. Turn carefully and cook 4 to 8 minutes more. (Do not overcook.) Baste several times lightly with melted butter during cooking process. Serve with lemon wedges. Serves four.

Cheese Poached Salmon

two pounds whole piece of fresh B.C. salmon salt, pepper
fresh ginger root celery stalks
one large onion, chopped one-third cup white wine (approximately)
¼ cup peanut oil
Juice of half lemon
one-third cup light soy sauce slivered green onions
coriander

Run salmon under hot water and very quickly scrape off scales.

Fill saucepan with enough water to cover the salmon completely. Add salt, pepper, piece of fresh ginger root the size of a hazelnut, celery stalks, onion and white wine.

Bring to rolling boil. Then remove from heat, quickly add salmon and cover tightly. Leave off heat and cook about ½ hour. Depending on thickness of salmon, longer cooking may be desirable. As soon as fish is cooked (and don't overcook it), remove immediately to serving platter.

Heat peanut oil until smoking and pour quickly over salmon. Squeeze lemon juice over, followed by the light soy sauce. Garnish with green onion, finely slivered ginger root and coriander.

Serves four. Suggested vegetable accompaniment — sugar peas and water chestnuts.

Fat and Unfit

KINGSTON, Ont. (CP) — More than half the population of Canada and perhaps two out of every three women over the age of 40 are overweight, said Conservative MPP Gordon Walker, parliamentary assistant to the Ontario minister of health. He also said that 76 per cent of the population spends less than one hour a week participating in sports and 79 per cent spend less than one hour weekly in other physical activities such as walking.

Bar Decorated

AKITA, Japan (AP) — The owner of a snack bar across the street from the city jail has decorated his building to look like the prison. Couples are handcuffed when they enter and "freed" when they leave.

Exchange Planned

KIRKLAND LAKE, Ont. (CP) — The YWCA here will discuss the possibility in the fall of setting up a women's exchange. In an exchange, women in the community doing handicrafts would have a place to take arti-

Not the Books

RCMP Insp. Frank Kobie, who heads the commercial fraud section in Edmonton, says investigations are not a matter of checking a company's books since they have usually be destroyed. Instead he has to build up transactions from the bottom to get a complete picture of the fraudulent operation. (CP Photo)

Truckers Use Radios To Reduce Tickets

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Long-haul truckers use citizens band (CB) radios to let other drivers know when they've spotted "Smokey the Bear"—trucker talk for a radar patrolman lying in wait along a highway.

In Columbus, "Smokey" has a CB radio, too. And he tells truckers where to find him.

Columbus freeway Patrolman Keith Evans, 27, got a CB and took the CB name or "handle" of Casper last November. Since then, 12 other Columbus freeway officers have bought their own units and taken their own handles, Casper said.

Official city permission to use the CB units came in March, Casper said, after the officers had proved the CBs have helped.

Casper says that letting truckers know the location of radar units helps control traffic. He said his speeding arrests have not decreased since he began broadcasting his location.

"The idea behind my job is to slow people down, not see how many tickets I can write," he said.

Co-operation with truckers also has become a two-way street, Casper said.

Truckers and other motorists with CB units tell each other when a motorist is in trouble, enabling police to get there faster than the drivers can telephone for help. Warnings from truck drivers that someone is driving funny" have increased drunken-driving arrests, he said.

Casper said he's heard the name of his unit and those of fellow "Smokeys" with handles like "Grabber," "White Ghost," "El Camino" and "Phantom Bear" has spread as far a Florida, Kansas and Massachusetts.

TRIALS AND TRIBULATIONS OF A MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT — By Gordon Aiken.

This book takes an earnest, funny and human look at the average M.P., the man who makes the government work. Mrs. Aiken was a member of parliament from 1962 to 1972, during which time her served in various positions. He was chairman of the banking and commerce committee, delegate to the United Nations and leader of the Canadian delegation to the Inter-Parliamentary Conference in Rome. Hence he is well qualified to describe Parliament from a back-bencher's viewpoint and this he does in very readable style, well spiced with anecdotes.

MY STORY — By Uri Geller.

Uri Geller is a famous and controversial Israeli psychic who has revealed extraordinary powers. He states that he had a normal childhood except for such times as being able to read his mother's mind, telepathic experiences at school and forekowledge of the six-day war. He tells of his first public appearance which led to his career on the stage and describes his experiments with scientists which verified his powers.

MOBILE HOMES: THE LOW-COST HOUSING HOAX — A report by the Centre for auto safety.

The Centre for Auto Safety was founded in 1970 with a grant from Consumers Union. Its purpose is to study and exert pressure for safer car design. This report on mobile homes states that these homes are for the most part poorly built; electrical fires are common; and it is difficult to get repairs done. There is also the problem of mobile home parks and dealing with "tyrannical" owners who are free to make any rules they may wish.

OUR MOTHERLAND AND OTHER VENTURES IN RUSSIAN REPORTAGE — By George Feifer

Ever since he was an exchange student and translator wandering about Moscow during the 1959 Fair, George Feifer has had a wish to show the West the flavor of Russian daily life. Over the years he has made many visits. His book is no guided tour via Intourist, but a slice-of-life look at the real U.S.S.R., including the private life of the Bolshoi's greatest ballerina, justice at the parquet level, and prostitution in Moscow.

SPADINA: A STORY OF OLD TORONTO — By Austin Seton Thompson

Spadina is the story of an old Toronto property, originally stretching from Queen St. to Eglinton Ave. and of the two families who have lived there since Governor Simcoe granted the land in 1793. Part 1 of the book describes the building of the first home, named "Spadina" by Dr. William Baldwin, a lawyer who dreamed of founding a family dynasty. His grandson sold the property in 1866. Part 11 describes its purchase and development by James Austin, a financier. He built a new home which stands today. Sir Henry Pellett built Casa Loma nearby. Sir John Eaton built Ardwold and Samuel Nordheimer built Glenedyth. The area became known as "Millionaire's Row". The book provides an interesting slimpse into Toronto's history.

French Canadians Feel At Home in Toronto

TORONTO (CP) — Jean-Raymond Saint-Cyr's friendly "bonjour" to persons in his office building used to be ignored. Today, his greetings are returned.

It is a small but significant sign of the growing place French-Canadians have carved for themselves here in the last 10 years.

"We now feel we belong here," said Mr. Saint-Cyr, station manager of CJBC radio, Toronto's French-language station.

"We still are French-Canadian and we will never be assimilated, but we are pleased to live in Toronto with English-speaking persons. We are all Canadians."

There is no French quarter here but there are 100,000 French-speaking residents. Most come from Quebec and others have moved from New Brunswick, Manitoba and other parts of Ontario.

When Mr. Saint-Cyr, his wife and five children moved from a small French-speaking community near Ottawa 10 years ago, there was only one elementary school, one small private high school and one French Catholic parish where the French language was used.

Now there are two parishes, six elementary schools, with public and separate school boards, a public high school, bilingual Glendon College, a weekly newspaper and a radio and television station as well as French theatres, book stores and cultural centres.

"Today this is a positive city for us. We feel free here," said Micheline St.-Cyr, director of La Chasse-Galerie, a French cultural centre. She is married to Jean-Raymond Saint-Cyr but spells her name differently.

Although the city is improving for French-speaking residents, she said, "When French-Canadians come here not knowing English, it is impossible to live."

La Chasse-Galerie tries to find jobs for French-speaking persons. There are some jobs for those speaking only French but more than 200 companies and government agencies have registered at the centre as potential employers for bilingual job-seekers.

Most French-Canadians agree it is important to keep their identity in an English-speaking city and also exchange their culture.

"French-Canadian culture is the culture of everyone in Canada," said Micheline St.-Cyr. "The more available we make it, the better we will all understand each other."

Names Disputed

TOKYO (AP) — Independent studies by two computer firms live disagreed on which name is more common—Suzuki or Sato—as a Japanese surname. General opinion has usually sided with Suzuki as the most common name.

There was an 81 cent rise in the cost of the monthly foodbasket, according to a Canadian Press Cross-Canada Survey. Saint John was the hardest hit when potatoes jumped to $2.89 from 79 cents in May. The foodbasket — 17 basic food items in the survey — cost $17.46 in June compared with $16.65 a month earlier. Graph shows national average prices for each item in June, and the average total since January, 1974. (CP Newsmap)

Chemist Finds New Extracting Method

RACINE, Wis. (AP) — In the continuing quest for new sources of protein, a University of Wisconsin chemist has developed a method of extracting protein from oats.

Wisconsin Agriculturist, a rural magazine, reports that Vernon Youngs is able to extract protein from oats by a simple method in which water is the only chemical used.

Youngs hulls the oats and then mills them into flour and bran. He then makes a water slurry of the oat flour and the bran and centrifuges the mixtures.

Each yields a high protein layer of more than 50 per cent protein, which could be used to fortify snack foods and bread. A side benefit is a residue bran that is about 19 per cent protein and could be used in breakfast cereals.

Porpoises Saved

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Tuna fishermen have demonstrated the latest techniques designed to prevent porpoise fatalities. Large schools of yellow fin tuna are usually found around porpoises. Under the new technique, porpoises are rounded up before the net is set and closed at the bottom. The tuna boat retreats, pulling the net so that porpoises can get out through the rear.

Old Schooner Met with Tears

TORONTO (CP) — When the schooner Atlanta sailed into Toronto harbor in mid-June, she was met by 18 old friends, some with tears in their eyes.

In 1948, the Atlanta brought 42 Estonian refugees to safety in Canada after a harrowing voyage across the Atlantic.

On June 19 of that year, the overloaded, 87-foot schooner slipped out of Stockholm harbor. The refugees, fleeing Soviet harassment, felt they were not safe in Sweden because other members of their group had mysteriously disappeared.

Karl Aaspere of Sutton, Ont., who organized the escape, sat in Atlanta's stern and recalled the 61-day voyage.

"She is designed to sleep 12, but we had 42 on board as well as all our luggage," he said. "She sat deeper in the water than she does now.

"We went through a hurricane with her and ran aground on a reef near Bermuda, but still she took us all the way," Mr. Aaspere said.

Instead of trying to go into Bermuda during the hurricane, they headed for New Brunswick, fighting 20-foot waves and living on bread crumbs and rain water.

"We had left with no papers and no passports," Mr. Aaspere said. "We were people without a country, but when we landed, Canadian authorities let us stay and here we are today."

The 27-ton schooner, originally built for the Swedish royal family, was sold at a loss to a New Brunswick businessman by the refugees.

The Atlanta has since changed ownership several times until she was discovered as a near-derelict in the Caribbean two years ago by Toronto businessmen Mel Welsh and Wayne Anderson.

The men have refurbished the vessel and will use her in Toronto as a charter boat.

Seven of the refugees have died since the voyage and others have moved to other parts of Canada.

UN Demands Halt To Illegal Flights

LIBREVILLE, Gabon (CP) — "Our meat is the very best," said the head waiter at Libreville's largest hotel. "It is flown in specially from Rhodesia."

The policies of President Albert Bernard Bongo have made this black-ruled African nation one of the biggest loopholes in the system of economic sanctions imposed by the United Nations on the white-minority government that runs Rhodesia.

A regular air-freight service of a Gabonese-owned DC8 jetliner carries Rhodesian meat and South African fruit and vegetables from Salisbury, Rhodesia, to Libreville. The plane remains there en route to Europe to bring back machinery and spare parts which are banned for export to Rhodesia by virtually all European countries.

British authorities said last week a UN committee had demanded a halt to the flights and the United States, which sold the aircraft to Bongo, also has protested.

The Rhodesian trade does not appear in any Gabon government statistics. Officially, the government of the mineral-rich West African state strictly observes the sanctions against Rhodesia. But government officials concede privately that Gabon has a liberal interpretation of the sanction rules.

"We are not alone among African countries to be realistic about sanctions," one official said. "So let others not cast stones at us."

High-quality fresh beef is on sale in Gabon's butcher shops and supermarkets at the equivalent of $3.50 a pound.

All of it comes from Rhodesia. The manager of one leading supermarket said he sold $800,000 worth of Rhodesian meat last year.

Diplomatic sources said the trade has increased sharply in recent years with the upswing in Gabon's prosperity. The last available trade figures show $900,000 worth of meat imports and $700,000 worth of fruit and vegetable imports in 1973 from "other" countries.

The sources said the "other" countries were Rhodesia and South Africa, and the statistics were incomplete.

The DC8 was sold to the Gabon government five years ago with a U.S. government export licence which stipulated that it was not to be diverted to users not approved by the United States.

President Bongo said he needed the plane for his personal use, but a few months after it arrived it was leased permanently to a charter company operated by Rhodesian citizens from an air-conditioned office in Libreville.

The manager of the airline, David Adams, functions as unofficial Rhodesian consul in Libreville, but spends much of his time in Salisbury.

Wildlife Rewards Clean-up

LONDON (CP) — They may not be nightingales, but more birds sing in Berkeley Square now than for decades past, the experts say.

Roses are redder, evergreens taller and butterflies more numerous, and it all makes this great city even more inviting for the natives as well as summertime tourist.

Naturalists attribute the flourishing new wildlife in London to the Clean Air Act, passed 19 years ago but still changing the face of the city.

"First to benefit from the poorer air, and the end of the choking fogs that once were as familiar here as the Thames, have been the insects.

They're a new headache for gardeners, but a blessing for birds. That, say ornithologists at the British Museum, is partly why such species as house martin, swift and black-cap are breeding closer than ever before to the centre of London.

They may also be braving the traffic din under pressures of a population expansion in their traditional territories.

Plants that one withered under a burden of soot now thrive and bloom more brightly in parks and back gardens.

Gardening writer Ashley Stephenson says evergreens especially have enjoyed a resurgence, because they never were able to shed their soot-clogged leaves in the foggy days of coal fires and chimney pots.

Exotic new species from China and elsewhere are growing here for the first time, he says.

Records kept by naturalists since the Clean Air Act was passed show 32 new types of butterflies and moths spotted between 1959 and 1967.

The insects, and the birds that eat them, seem particularly numerous this summer because of an abnormally mild winter.

To Decorate Hoardings

LONDON (CP) — Schoolchildren have been invited to add color to Covent Garden by decorating the hoardings which surround the central market building—now deserted since the market moved to Nine Elms earlier this year. Art schools, adult institutes, primary and secondary schools have been asked to get a good range of age groups. Some 150 children and their teachers are expected to take part.

GIVES BOAT

LONDON (CP) — Sir Alec Rose, who won fame sailing his 36-foot auxiliary yacht, Lively Lady, around the world in 1968-69, has given the boat to the Maritime Trust. They plan to charter the craft to the Island Cruising Club of Salcombe in South Devon at his request.

Senior Citizens...

If you are 65 or older and have lived here for the past year, most prescription drugs can be free.

This is what Ontario is doing for you to get them.

Effective August 1, we have a new law in Ontario. It will allow almost everyone who is 65 or older and has been an Ontario resident for at least the past 12 months to receive most prescription drugs free. That means prescriptions written by physician or dentist and filled in Ontario. Only those drugs listed in Ontario's Drug Benefit Formulary are free.

Here is who is eligible:

Ontario residents who receive Old Age Security.

If you are 65 or older and are presently receiving an Old Age Security cheque from the federal government, you will automatically receive your new Drug Benefit Eligibility Card before August 1. (And, of course, if you are already getting a drug benefit card, you will continue to get one.) You don't have to do anything about it.

Ontario residents not receiving Old Age Security.

If you are 65 or older, and have lived in Ontario for at least the past year but less than 10 years, you too are entitled to Ontario's prescription drug benefits. But because we don't know who you are, you have to apply for the drug benefit card—at your pharmacy or from the Ministry of Health. After you're enrolled, you'll automatically receive your drug benefit card.

Here's how Drug Benefit works.

There are more than 1,500 prescription drugs listed in the Ministry of Health's Drug Benefit Formulary. When you visit a physician or dentist, tell him you qualify for the Drug Benefit so that he can prescribe medication from the Formulary. Then, give your Drug Benefit Card to the pharmacist. Your pharmacy will keep your card. But you can have it returned—in case you move or want to go to a different pharmacy.

No cost to you.

When you get your prescription, you pay nothing. The pharmacist will be paid by your Ontario government.

In Ontario, we wish you the best of health. And we're doing something about it. So if you need to apply (and most people don't), pick up your Drug Benefit application form at your pharmacy, or write to:

Hydro to Accept Capital Costs Cut

TORONTO (CP) — Ontario Hydro will abide by power's tial government directives to cut administrative and long-term capital costs, Energy Minister Dennis Timbrell told the legislature Tuesday.

But he could not say what impact cost-cutting, introduced in Monday's new budget measures, would have on Hydro's requested 29.7-per-cent rate increase for next year.

He said despite published reports indicating Hydro would not pledge spending cuts, the Crown agency understands objectives and "has already begun to do something to achieve them."

He said he met Hydro chairman Robert Taylor Tuesday and was informed a 60-day freeze on hiring has been imposed as well as a review of costs, and a reassessment of capital spending is under way for submission to the Ontario Energy Board.

Among factors which could affect the board's decision on rate increases are new data on load forecasts, fuel costs and reserves required, he said.

He said requiring Hydro to shave $1 billion from its long-term capital spending program could mean stretching the completion schedule of one or more proposed generating stations and thus "narrowing the reserve margin which we have been used to."

Outside the legislature, he said this might mean greater interruptions and temporary power cuts to the small percentage of customers on interruptible service.

Referring to Hydro's requested rate increase, Mr. Timbrell said the 29.7-per-cent hike was "not one I'd promote."

He told the legislature the cost-cutting measures will result in "a smaller increase in rates than that which we might otherwise have had to accept."

Ford to Be Candidate And Will Spend Limit

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford's campaign managers hope to spend the full $10 million permitted by law in his campaign for the 1976 Republican nomination, an informed source said today.

Ford campaign officials said the spending limits in the new federal campaign law mean the President Ford Committee will have about 55 employees. By contrast, President Richard Nixon's 1972 campaign committee had more than 200 employees.

Following Ford's formal announcement of candidacy Tuesday, his campaign managers were said to be considering whether to seek the $10 million in private funds or accept no to $5 million in federal funds, the source said.

The law gives candidates matching federal funds after they raise $5,500 in contributions of under $250 in each of 20 states.

Another early decision will be where to find office space for the committee headed by Howard Callaway, former army secretary, and the fund-raising operation headed by David Packard, former deputy defence secretary.

The law limits candidates to spending $10 million in pursuing the nomination. Once nominated, they can spend another $20 million in the general election.

Ford's announcement came the same day that it was disclosed a committee is being formed for a possible challenge to the president by Ronald Reagan, former California governor.

Reagan denied reports that he had decided to challenge Ford and said his future plans "will be announced some time this year."

Arctic Gas Tries To Bar U.S. Rival

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian Arctic Gas Pipeline Ltd. moved Tuesday to bar a United States competitor from a National Energy Board hearing this fall on a northern natural gas pipeline.

Lawyers for Arctic Gas, one of the two Canadian proponents for a northern pipeline, told the board that El Paso Alaska Co. has no direct interest in the board hearings.

Michael Golcie, the Arctic Gas lawyer, told the board it objects to El Paso's inclusion in the hearing because "it's sole purpose is to promote the success of its own project."

But that view was challenged by Walter Williston, counsel for El Paso, who said "a person is directly interested if it affects his pocket book."

The exchanges came during a conference called by the board to settle procedures for the fall hearings on the pipeline, expected to start this fall and take most of a year to complete.

Arctic Gas has applied for permission to build a $7-billion pipeline connecting Alaskan and Mackenzie River Delta gas to southern markets. Foothills Pipelines Ltd. of Calgary seeks permission to build a smaller, $4-billion line linking only the Delta gas.

El Paso has asked the U.S. Federal Power Commission for permission to build a line from the northern Prudhoe Bay oil and gas field south across Alaska to the port of Valdez, where it would be liquified and shipped by tanker to the U.S. west coast. There it would be turned back to gas and transported to market by pipeline.

Major gas pipeline companies and distributors such as TransCanada PipeLines Ltd., Consumers Gas Co. and Union Gas Co., called for exclusion of El Paso. All are members of the Arctic Gas group.

Hyman Soloway, appearing on behalf of the board, said a ruling on the matter will be handed down later.

Curb Sought On Sparing Killers' Lives

OTTAWA (CP) — Two Progressive Conservative MPs introduced bills in the Commons Tuesday to restrict the cabinet's right to commute death sentences.

John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta) would allow the cabinet to commute death sentences only when a jury recommended clemency or was unable to agree on a recommendation. Donald Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich) said in his bill that commutation should be limited to cases where a majority of jurors have recommended clemency.

A jury may recommend for or against clemency or make no recommendation.

Mr. Munro's bill also would amend the Criminal Code to provide the death penalty for murders committed in the commission of violent crimes such as robberies, kidnappings, hijackings and rapes.

Reporter 'Researches' Kissinger's Garbage

WASHINGTON (AP) — State Secretary Henry Kissinger is distressed that a reporter is rooting through his garbage in search of scandal.

Jay Gourley, 27, of The National Enquirer, a weekly newspaper published in Lantana, Fla., collected five bags of trash from in front of Kissinger's home early Tuesday and is sifting through the debris.

So far, the reporter said he has determined that someone in Kissinger's home uses patent medicine, smokes Marlboro cigarettes and occasionally throws away the morning paper unopened.

Seventeen Quebec Students to Make City Home for Two Weeks

By JERRY BROWN
Staff Reporter

An army of almost 1,100 Quebec students will pass through Belleville on a train, Thursday afternoon, pausing long enough to discharge 17 French-Canadian visitors and their Quebec area hosts.

Part of a national exchange program arranged annually and subsidized by the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews, the travellers will be met by a contingent of prominent Bellevillians, among them Mayor Frank Jeffery.

She will be joined by Keith Allison of the Rotary Club, the local group sponsoring the exchange program, an emissary from the chamber of commerce and the president of the horticultural society who will present them with a gift of a flower.

The program was conceived by Louis St. Laurent, the first chairman of the council, as a device to foster better understanding between the diverse geographical sections of Canada.

Students throughout the country are invited to apply to visit with young people in different areas for two weeks and immediately reciprocate and entertain their counterparts in their homes.

The 21-car train, the one of largest to pass through Belleville in a year, said Mr. Allison, is carrying the students to various Ontario destinations after spending the past two weeks with Quebec families.

The students are advised to participate in all the local activities and situations they encounter during the trip in an attempt to improve their understanding of different cultures.

The visitors, 15 girls and two boys will be offered a limited special activities program while in Belleville.

"The whole idea is learn about other people, to improve understanding, "by living among them," said Mr. Allison, "The student and families will assume responsibility for the two-week stay."

On Monday, July 14, the Rotarians have invited the visitors and local young people to be guests at their weekly meeting.

Following the meeting a tour of Delora Stellite has been arranged.

The highlight of the day's events will be an audience at city hall during which the mayor will make all the visitors honorary citizens.

The students then go back to the family setting for more home experience without another break in routine until July 22, the day before they return home.

The Rotarians have arranged a scenic tour of the city for the visitors which will terminate with a patio party.

Cycling Path, Yacht Basin Suggested in Waterfront Study

By HARRY MULHALL
Staff Reporter

A current study of the Bay of Quinte waterfront recommends the establishment of a conservation area for Point Anne and a yachting basin for Belleville.

The suggestions are the first step towards conclusive recommendations on how the southside shoreline fronted by the three municipalities in the Belleville area could best be developed for waterfront recreation.

The initial report came Tuesday night as consultants presented their interim findings to the Moira Conservation Authority's water control advisory committee.

The study at this stage, however, is not locked into any specific proposals.

Ralph E. Crysler, Toronto consulting engineer who has directed the study — launched late last year — emphasized that suggestions at this stage are merely to "bounce off" agencies interested or involved and obtain reaction. Such reflexes will help form the basis for the final draft document on the study expected sometime in late fall.

The report in the next week will go before municipal government groups and other local agencies involved in the waterfront area under study — including all of Thurlow Township, the city of Belleville and west to Allen's Road in Sidney Township.

After that, reaction of community groups involved when the study was in its formative stages earlier this years, will be sought, said Mr. Crysler.

A main thrust of his study is to provide an unbroken flank of public access to the waterfront resource. This calls for walkways along an area where access is compounded by a variety of ownerships — private, public, corporative.

"Continuous waterfront walkways is what I'm looking for — while respecting private rights at the same time," he said later in an interview. "That's the concept I'm working on."

But, he admitted, some of his suggestions to date could be "controversial" — specifically those dealing with expanding boating facilities in the city area.

Suggestions he is going to present official waterfront groups in the next week for reaction include:

— Yacht and small boat basins east of the city harbor in the jurisdiction of the Belleville Harbor Commission. This includes discussing the possibility of the commission shifting its commercial shipping operations, which have declined over the years — further east to Point Anne, where the water is deeper.

— Docks on South Front St., off East Zwick's Park and in West Zwick's Park lagoon.

Such proposals, he said, will be discussed with the harbor commission, the city's Harbor Improvement Committee and the parks and recreation committees.

The report also notes the city's present park system does not provide for extensive walking or cycling — and cycling is a "rapidly growing and very popular" recreation. It proposes walkways along the Moira River linking the city's northend riverside parks into the waterfront parks system.

Other suggestions include:

In Thurlow — the big marsh on the western rim of Point Anne could become a conservation area. A marina could be considered for the adjacent Blessington Creek area.

Sidney Township — Acquisition of a barn and part of a farm west of Allen's Road, which could be transformed into an "activities centre" — for summer theatre, crafts and other cultural pursuits.

Report Critical Of Dredging Plan

A biologist has recommended against dredging the mouth of the Moira River to improve fishing.

The suggestion is contained in a report commissioned for the Quinte Bayfront Study — and Thursday night drew angry reaction from a city councillor when it was aired.

The biologist's finding was part of an interim report on the study presented the Moira Conservation Authority's water control advisory committee by Toronto consultant Ralph E. Crysler.

The presence of proposed dams has reduced the potential for rainbow trout while the natural resources ministry was discontinuing its Pacific salmon stocking program, said the report.

Dredging therefore would be of no advantage and would only upset fish which already are in the area, it concluded.

Ald. Sue Weeks called the situation "ridiculous."

He said various varieties of fish now are being caught in the river — some from Lake Ontario — and concluded:

"The U.S. fish find our river attractive. Why not the Canadian fish?" he queried.

Mr. Crysler said he had not spoken to the ministry on the matter but would be collecting more information before making the final report to the authority.

Woman Abducted

BANCROFT — A Belleville man has been charged by the Bancroft detachment of the Ontario Provincial Police following the abduction of a North Hastings woman.

The incident involving a 23-year-old woman took place five miles east of Bancroft on Highway 500 at 12.45 a.m., July 9.

George Barry Krogman, 23, of 215 Victoria Ave. was arrested by OPP officers following a call of complaint made at 1.28 a.m. about a car revving its motor in a private driveway on the Bronton Rd. here.

He has been charged with forcible confinement, said OPP Corporal Henry Deltteer.

Campaign Nets $102,000 For YMCA Capital Debt

By JERRY BROWN
Staff Reporter

With the help of $12,000 donated by the Vardmen Benefit Fund, the YMCA's "quiet but persistent" fund-raising campaign came to a successful conclusion today.

In a letter of resignation delivered at a press conference, Ben Corlet, campaign chairman for the effort announced the original goal of $100,000 to eliminate the capital debt incurred when the "Y" was built had been exceeded by $2,000.

The outstanding loan at the bank for $4,125 has been completed for by pledges totalling $6,370.

The money was raised in a "professional solicitation" campaign from friends of the YMCA and the industry in town.

One company Proctor and Gamble, one of the 312 contributors, pledged the final over the top last week with a $2,000 gift even though they have yet to begin operations in Belleville.

The regional board of the YMCA expressed scepticism about the project from the beginning citing failures by all other YMCAs to reduce debt by fund-raising, said Di Dainmanidis, executive director of the Y.

Douglas Horne, president of the YMCA said there were three reason for the campaign success.

"Without Ben Coke's drive, push and persistent efforts we wouldn't have done it," said Mr. Horne.

The fact it was low-key was important, he said, and thirdly because it was non-professional, we kept costs at level of one — and one-half per-cent, or just under $1,500.

Boyle Remanded

MADOC — A Belleville man has been remanded for trial to Sept. 2 on a charge of possession of a weapon dangerous to the public in Madoc provincial court, following a brief appearance in court Tuesday.

Charged is John Robert Boyle, 29, of R#4, Belleville.

The charge against Mr. Boyle was laid June 18 during a strike of Hastings County road workers of whom he was a representative during the walkout.

Police said the charge was laid following an intersection at Eldorado on Highway 62 north of here.

BGH May Cut Surgery Due to Blood Shortage

Belleville General Hospital (BGH) might have to cut back on surgery this summer due to a serious shortage of blood, says Philip Rickard, BGH executive director.

Mr. Rickard said today, "it's a province-wide problem and it also affects us locally. It seasonally comes around like this.

"It's sufficiently serious that we may have to restrict some surgery," he commented. "We're asking surgeons to watch the situation so that anything that can be delayed will be delayed."

Mr. Rickard said BGH uses about 20-30 units of blood per day during a busy period. "We've been drawing more from the province than we've been raising locally," he said.

Mr. Rickard pointed out a Red Cross blood donor clinic will be held Thursday at Centennial Secondary School on Palmer Rd., from 1:45 - 4:30 p.m. and 6-8:30 p.m.

Checking for Faults

Members of mobile team from the transportation and communications ministry closely examines an automobile as part of safety check now underway at Quinte Exhibition grounds.

The check will last all week and faulty vehicles have licence plates removed on the spot until problems are corrected.

Proposed Bill Would Expand Area Of Teacher - College Negotiations

By ROBIN CHASE
Staff Reporter

Negotiations between the provincial government and Ontario's community college teachers have slowed as both parties await legislative passage of Bill 108 says Brian McColl, head of the teachers' negotiating team.

In a telephone interview from his Kingston area home, Mr. McColl, a mathematics instructor at St. Lawrence College Kingston Campus, said Tuesday, both parties will not meet again until the week of July 21 at which time it is expected the bill will be either put into law or close to it.

The talks involve a new contract for teachers in the 22 colleges who comprise the college system established in technology (CAAT) academic division of the Civil Service Association of Ontario (CSAO).

The two-year contract expires Aug. 31. Meetings were held during May and June but others slated for late June and the second week of July were postponed due to the pending legislation and the recent arbitration award for the present contract.

Bill 108 will free both the CSAO's CAAT academic and support divisions from the Crown Employees' Collective Bargaining Act. Under the act, such issues as hours of work, job classification and staff reductions are not negotiable.

Earl Wall, president of the Loyalist College teachers' local here, said Tuesday the new bill will mean "future negotiations in our area will not be hemmed in."

He blamed provisions under the act for creating the two-year management-union deadlock which resulted in the present contract being unresolved until last June. "There were so many restrictions, they couldn't negotiate," he commented.

A spokesman for the ministry of colleges and universities said Tuesday he believe the bill is in its second reading. Mr. McColl added that the negotiating team has spoken to the minister, James Auld, who indicated "there's good possibility it (the bill) might be passed" by the end of July.

Thunder Showers End Heat Wave

It's still summertime — but the living is easier.

Searching, sultry weather finally released its grip on the Belleville-Trenton area of the Quinte district late morning as thunderstorms move in to break the sweltering pattern of recent weeks.

In the wake of the break, the duty forecaster at CFB Trenton today was predicting "noticeably cooler" weather for the rest of the week.

Temperatures will drop about seven degrees Celsius from the recent sweltering high 29s and low 20s which have made life a clammy endurance test for many.

Humidity was also sharply on the decline.

Talks Still On

Contract talks between the college of applied arts and technology (CAAT) academic division of the Civil Service Association of Ontario (CSAO) and the provincial government are proceeding well, says Bruce McColl, head of the negotiating team.

"The general atmosphere and tenor is better than it has been the last two times," he said of bargaining on the two-year contract which is scheduled to be in effect Sept. 1.

Mr. McColl said both sides have settled such minor issues as sabbatical and other types of leave, copyright protection for teachers, a no discrimination clause and a tentative agreement on a grievance procedure.

Mouthguard Clinic To Resume

The Hastings and Prince Edward Counties health unit has announced its mouthguard project will resume in Sept-ember.

Dr. Dennis Warrick, director of dental services, explained the service promotes "mouth protection in contact sports".

He says mouthguard clinics have been confirmed for 19 counties high schools. Only high school students are eligible and there is a $4 cost per student for each custom-made mouthguard. Insurance is not included.

Promotion materials and further instructions will reach all of the schools during the first week of September.

Rain Forestalls Water Rationing

TRENTON — Today's rain and drop in temperature will likely forestall any need to impose controls on water used by Trenton households.

Trenton utilities commission manager Douglas Manlow said today it was too early to accurately predict what the change in the weather will mean to demand for water.

However, he "guesstimated" demand will likely drop by 1.5 million gallons.

He said that if the dry spell had continued the commission could have been forced to consider establishing controls on water use here.

Average daily use calculated over a year runs between 2.5 and 4 million gallons. During the recent hot spell use of water in Trenton almost doubled to 5.7 million gallons.

As a result, said Mr. Manlow, the commission was forced to meet demand by working pumps at the Murray wells and the filter station on the Trent River at maximum capacity.

Warm Spell Water Demand

Dry weather sees annual daily trek of water carriers to city's filtration plant where they draw supplies to top up rural wells as levels evaporate. Bill O'Brien and brother Mike load 1,000-gallon tanker at plant Tuesday — one of a number of carriers who now make such trips daily. However, plant officials so far this month say demand is not notably up from last year despite recent, long dry spell.

And Then It Rained

All weekend indications pointed to a prolonged period of hot, humid, sunny weather with no rain in sight — so Jim Heffer and his eight-year-old son, James, of Belleville decided to launch their boat to enjoy the bright sunshine enveloping the area. They at least enjoyed a few days of lazy drifting on Bay of Quinte waters — and then, today, the rains came.

Marshall Serves Notice He's Healthy

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Mike Marshall on the mound for Los Angeles Dodgers is a sight for sore eyes—not to mention sore rib cage.

"Mike's healthy now, and when he's healthy he's one of the best," said Los Angeles manager Walt Alston after his ace relief pitcher helped the Dodgers beat Pittsburgh Pirates 3-0 Tuesday night.

The right-handed lefty looked like the Marshall of old, checking the Pirates on one hit over three innings after taking over for injured Don Sutton in the seventh inning.

Marshall, last year's Cy Young winner, has been having a painful season this year due to a rib injury. But he threw with ease in batting practice for 20 minutes before putting the Pirates down and out.

"I threw batting practice before the game to get my bearing pitches under control," Marshall said. "I'm not all the way back yet, but I'm starting to get there."

In other National League baseball games, San Diego Padres beat Chicago Cubs 8-4 in 15 innings, New York Mets defeated Atlanta Braves 4-3, Cincinnati Reds beat Philadelphia Phillies 7-1, Houston Astros defeated Montreal Expos 3-1 and San Francisco Giants beat St. Louis Cardinals 6-4.

Boston, 13-4, led 3-0 on a two-hitter going into the seventh when he was forced to leave the game. Dave Parker opened the Pirate seventh with a single and Sutton went to the showers when he pulled a groin muscle on an ensuing delivery to Richie Zisk.

Marshall retired Zisk before Manny Sanguillen singled up the middle, then he retired pinch-hitters Ed Kirkpatrick and Bob Robertson to end the inning.

Unearned runs in the third and fourth innings helped Los Angeles to a 3-0 lead off loser Dock Ellis, and Jim Wynn homered with two out in the sixth.

Fred Kendall's two-run single in the 15th inning lifted San Diego over Chicago. With one out in the 15th, Don Hahn doubled off Tom Dettlore, 5-2, and Dave Winfield was walked intentionally. The runners moved up on a grounder by Hector Torres before Kendall singled to left.

Joe McIntosh, 7-7, San Diego's sixth pitcher in the game, got the victory that snapped the Padres' three-game losing streak and handed the Cubs their fourth consecutive loss.

New York's Dave Kingman hit a three-run homer in the sixth inning his 19th home run of the season, to lead the Mets against Atlanta. Wayne Garrett opened the game with his first homer of the year, giving the Mets 13 homers in their last eight games.

Cincinnati's Gary Nolan notched his first victory in almost a month with relief help from Rawly Eastwick. The Reds beat Philadelphia, Nolan, 8-5, scattered six hits in 6 2-3 innings before departing in the seventh when the Phillies scored their run.

Dave Roberts pitched a four-hitter and drove across two runs with two singles to lead Houston over Montreal.

Hitters Hold Spotlight

Expected Duel Fizzles

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A great pitchers' duel was anticipated when Baltimore's Jim Palmer and California's Nolan Ryan, both named to the American League all-star team, faced each other Tuesday night.

It turned out to be a hitting duel instead.

Palmer wasn't involved in the decision although he came within one out of becoming the first 14-game winner in the majors. And Ryan suffered his fifth consecutive defeat as Baltimore Orioles beat California Angels 8-5 in 10 innings.

In other AL baseball action, Boston Red Sox beat Minnesota Twins 6-5, New York Yankees blanked Texas Rangers 4-0, Kansas City Royals defeated Milwaukee Brewers 9-1, Oakland A's beat Cleveland Indians 5-2 and Detroit Tigers defeated Chicago White Sox 6-6.

Palmer, although he allowed only six hits in nine innings, had all five California runs in a 8-2-3 innings and blew a 5-3 lead with two out in the ninth. Ryan, who hasn't won since June 8, yielded 10 hits, six walks and eight runs—three of them unearned.

If Palmer and Ryan weren't up to their usual all-star form, neither, according to both sides, is the plate umpire Jim Evans.

JIM PALMER

"The only ball I threw in the ninth inning was to Lahoud," said Palmer, who saw his two-run lead disappear on a walk to Lahoud, a single by Lee Stanton, who homered earlier, a wild pitch to John Doherty and Chalk's two-run single.

The Orioles complained from their bench and Evans finally ejected manager Earl Weaver. The Angels also complained but to no avail.

The Orioles won the game on Mark Belanger's two-run single in the 10th following a walk and a two-base throwing error by first baseman Doherty.

Fred Lynn's tie - breaking pinch single with the bases loaded in the ninth inning drove in the winning run for Boston.

By winning, the Red Sox remained one game ahead of New York Yankees in the American League's East Division.

New York's Catfish Hunter pitched a seven-hitter for his 11th victory and fifth shutout and Ron Blomberg hit a two-run homer in the first inning against Texas.

Harmon Killebrew's two-run double highlighted a five-run Kansas City first inning against Bill Travers and John Mayberry added a three-run homer for Pete Broberg in the fifth.

Oakland's Gene Tenace drove in four runs with a homer and Claudell Washington tripled twice, drove in two runs and scored twice.

Roberts Two-way Threat

HOUSTON (AP) — When Houston manager Preston Gomez says his performance against Montreal Tuesday night was his best of the season, he should indicate if he means hitting or pitching.

Roberts thwarted the Expos with four hits and led the Astros to their third consecutive victory, a 5-1 decision that included two run-scoring hits by Roberts.

"I'd say this was my best performance of the season," said Roberts, now 5-10. "Whether I started tonight or not was uncertain because of a slight groin pull. I threw eight minutes warming up, nothing but slow stuff."

Roberts had a 4-0 shutout working until the fifth inning when Montreal's Larry Parrish hit his sixth home run of the season.

The Astros took a 2-0 lead in the first inning on Bob Watson's run-scoring single and a sacrifice fly by catcher Milt May. Houston scored two more runs in the fourth on Rob Andrews' sacrifice fly and the first of two run-scoring singles by Roberts.

Roberts banged another single off the right-field fence to score Andrews in the sixth inning in what could have been a double.

"On that ball I hit to the wall, I might have tried to stretch it into a double, but I didn't — it was worth the —," he said. "I don't want to waste one game for two or —. I starts if I did hurt myself."

Roberts put down a minor Expos uprising in the ninth when Gary Carter singled and Pepe Mangual walked. Roberts got his victory with two pop-ups and then a strikeout of Nate Colbert for the final out.

Barrie Winner

VANCOUVER (CP) — Ontario scored two runs in the last two innings to break a 4-4 tie and defeat Saskatchewan 6-4 Tuesday in the opening game of the Canadian Senior baseball championship.

Rightfielder Mel Kennedy went the distance for the Ontario, scattering five hits and striking out seven.

He was helped by five Saskatchewan errors, three of them in the second inning, which allowed Ontario to score four unearned runs.

Ontario is represented by Barrie Red Sox baseball team which won by Regina Red Sox.

John Self's two runs and Ron Petersen's five-hit pitching led Alberta, represented by Calgary Jimmies, to a 3-1 victory over the Prince Edward Island all-star team.

Self helped Alberta come from a deficit 1-0 deficit, hitting a solo home run in the fourth inning.

He reached first in the bottom of the ninth inning on a single, moving to third on walks to Ken Grove and Dave Morris, and scored the game-winning run when Al Herback hit a ground-ball while P.E.I. shortstop Don Brown fielded. Brown's throw to home plate eluded catcher Dave Larkin.

Lynda Leads by 3

WINNIPEG (CP) — Lynda Devine of Thunder Bay, Ont., carded her second consecutive 80 to take a three-stroke lead Tuesday after two rounds in the Mobile Manitoba Womens Golf Association amateur championship.

Miss Devine, seeking her third consecutive victory in the tournament, toured the par 73 Red Acres Golf and Country Club in identical nines of 40.

Pam Falk of Winnipeg moved into second place with the day's best round, a 79—that left her three strokes behind the leader with a two-round total of 163.

Alone in third place was Joann Lindsay, of Minneapolis, Minn., who plays out of Falcon Lake, Man. She improved on her opening-round 83 by one stroke for a two-round total of 166.

Marg Hamowitz of Winnipeg, the first round leader and tournament winner six times, slipped to a 87 after an opening round 77. Her 166 total left her tied with Linda Palahniuk of Winnipeg.

Old Hand at Pitching, Waite Enjoys OFL Play

By TOM GAVEY
Sports Staff

So far this season the one thing the Belleville McDonald's of the Ontario Football League has done well is pitching ace.

Oshawa has Paul Wannamaker, Hamilton has Wally Dick, London has Metro Szeryk and St. Catharines has Dick Butler.

Belleville's only veteran starter was Bob Ethier, who impressed many with the games he threw. But Bob Ethier seems to be no more, as he hasn't made any road trips with Mace Haley and seems to be wholly disinterested.

That leaves everything on the shoulders of young Ted Waite, who appears to leadership of the Belleville McDonald's pitching staff.

This is not to take anything away from Scott Reid of Jimmy Chase. Both have already proven themselves, but, it is true, that Waite is the hardest thrower of the three.

Ted already has over 50 strikeouts to his credit for this season, and has one win over the Oshawa Tony's under his belt, when he threw a shutout against Wayne Colley.

One of the things which might put Waite ahead of his counterparts is the fact that he practises more often than they do. Every night he can be found at one of the local schools, practicing his rises or his drop.

Also, he's been pitching since he was 15, and that was in the old Commercial League, for Point Anne, a team many will remember.

He also pitched for the Ellis Juniors and Rollins Construction contributing to five championship teams in his years with the Commercial League (now the Quinte Fastball League).

Twice Ted had the honor of playing on the league's All-Star team, and three times he was named the league's top pitcher.

In 1970 his record was 12-1 and the Ellis Juniors went on to win the Oshawa Junior Tournament Championship.

Ted's teammates call him "Hussler", mostly because of the size of his arms. He is no Pete Landers, but his arms are large, mostly from working with weights in his spare time.

TED WAITE

He even came close to winning the Commercial League batting championship one year, hitting .434 to come second to Larry Mawby.

"This is a great opportunity" says Waite. "I'm improving all the time and I've learned that one bad pitch can kill you".

"This is a good chance for all of us and I'm glad Dale (Duval) and Doug Coldwell came up with the idea".

"I think next year we'll be in the thick of things; as for this year, it's never too late to come back and improve some more people".

At 5-foot-7 and 190 pounds Waite looks small to some batters, but his fastball is known to be one of the best in the league.

Maybe the Mace won't win it all this year, but at least with players like Ted they'll know they tried.

Chalks Up No-hitter

Meads Move Up On Holoway's Arm

Sonny Holoway of Mead Johnson threw hitless ball at Brooke Bond on Tuesday night in Belleville Industrial Softball League play.

Holoway took the 5-0 win as he stymied Brooke Bond batters, striking out 11 of them while walking just three.

The loss went to Tom St. Jules, who gave up five hits and three walks while striking out six batters.

Holoway helped himself at the plate too, as he came through with a triple. Ray Bennett, Dave Dolan, Charley Rowbotham, Gary Genereaux and Jim Woods singled.

The win moved Meads into a tie with the Post Office for second place in the West Division.

Broadloom Blanked

Belleville Yardmen Benefit Fund defeated a skipping Belleville Broadloom team 10-0, with Sherry Gulliver taking the victory on a two-hitter.

The Belleville and District Ladies Softball League game gave the Belleville Yardmen Benefit Fund team a strong hold on first place.

The loss went to Sue Fobert, who gave up 19 hits and two walks in the five inning game.

Sheila Alexander, Helen Deville and Sharon Hardison all came up with three hits each to lead the victors' attack.

Shuts Out Melrose 4-0

Ron McTaggart in Form

Ron McTaggart threw shutout ball for the Foxboro Merchants over Melrose in South Hastings Baseball League play on Tuesday night.

The final score of 4-0 came on McTaggart's two-hitter. He struck out eight batters and walked four.

In the other league game, Plane's Concrete defeated Read 9-1.

Midge McTaggart and John Pepper took the Melrose loss, combining to give up eight hits and one walk while striking out five batters.

John Masterson hit a triple in the win, while Dave Chisholm had a double and a single for the Foxboro squad.

Midge McTaggart and Randy Pascoe hit singles for the only Melrose safeties.

Rob Read gave up just five hits as he took an easy 9-1 win over Read for Plane's Concrete.

Robb struck out 12 batters and walked three.

Ken Abrams took the loss, giving up 12 hits and three walks while striking out six batters.

Steve Moore had three singles for the winners while Warren Hay and Garney Adams doubled and singled.

Phil Badgley and Carm Millican had doubles for the losers.

GROSSE POINTE, Mich. (AP) — Ricochet has been declared the official winner in the Two Tone world sailing championships after an international racing jury dismissed two protests against the boat. The jury's decision gives Ricochet the over-all crown and makes her the winner of the final race in the two-ton series as well.

Merchants Rally; Edge Juveniles

It took two runs in the bottom of the sixth inning to give Stirling Merchants a slim 3-2 win over the Stirling Juveniles. In the other Stirling and District Softball League game Holloway A and B Precast continued its winning ways with a 10-3 victory over Stirling Mens.

Larry Bernard gave up three hits and three walks in taking the win, while striking out 10 batters.

Robert Cook took the loss, giving up seven hits and two walks while gaining four strikeouts.

Barnard had two hits for the winners while Ted Dobson, Don Potts and Rick Shorey had RBI.

Cooke had two RIB in the loss while Mark Bardon and Kevin Solmes were the other Juvenile hitters.

Dave Marvin took an easy 10-3 win over Stirling Men's as Holloway A and B Precast had 18 hits.

The loss went to Ray Weldman and Don Burkitt, who combined for six strikeouts.

Bill Sills had three RBI in the winning drive, while Keith McDonnell smacked a homer.

Burkitt was his own team's leading hitter with a homer and two RBIs.

Getting Some Points

The Squeeze Is On In Fastball League

The farther things get into the Quinte Fastball League season, the closer games, and consequently, the race for playoff positions, get.

On Tuesday night Howard and Robert just got by the Ellis Junior 2-1, in nine innings. Barbon Supplies defeated Roraback Real Estate 3-1 in the second game.

It was miscues that beat the Ellis Juniors in their contest, as they made a total of seven errors for the evening. It was two errors that cost the Juniors the winning run in the ninth.

Howard and Robert got excellent pitching from left hander Ron Hill, who gave up just one junior hit during the game. He walked three batters and set down four on third strikes, going all the way.

Paul Wilson and John Sprakfetl combined for the Junior, giving up three hits and three walks while striking out five H and B batsmen.

Rick Graham touched the Junior for two singles, and continues to lead the league in batting at .290. Dwight Rathwell also got on with one single.

The only Junior hit came from John Hudgins.

LINESCORES:

In the second matchup Ken McWhite took the Barbon win over Roraback 3-1.

DeMille gave up five hits and a walk while sending 12 Roraback batters back to the bench on third strikes.

Wayne Casselman put together a good pitching effort for Roraback, giving up four hits and no walks while striking out two batters.

Dennis Neron collected two RBIs in the win while picking up a double. Carl Stacey, Wayne McDonald and Ted Walkwork all singled.

Harry MacDonald picked up a triple in the loss, while Lyle Lloyd, Pete Pettingill, Bernie Barnes, it was all part of a Government program to give clinics in all sports to younger participants. Jeff Coughlin and Casselman singled.

Kinsmen Tuning Up

When Belleville's Kinsmen Squirts play host team to a 14-team tournament in the city on the weekend, they'll go into the action guided by coaches Don Smith, Bill Curry and Dozz Dunc.

Kinsmen are scheduled to meet Scarborough Corvette Park, one of the early favorites, in their first outing in the second annual Ontario Amateur Softball Association Tournament which is supported by Belleville Minor Softball Association and McDonald Family Restaurant, Brelyard.

The Belleville-Scarborough match is scheduled for Alemite Park at 9 a.m. Saturday. Other 9 o'clock games have Ambrosiano meeting Unionville at Queen Victoria Public School's south diamond; Napanee, winner of two tournaments this year, booking up with Glenfield at Queen Elizabeth Public School and Springbrook playing Scarborough Cedar Hill at Queen Victoria, west.

First round games continue at 10:30 a.m. with Woodstock taking on North Bendale at Queen Victoria, north; Eringate meeting Bridlewood, Queen Victoria, west, and Alderwood, another favorite, matching skills with Richmond Hill at Alemite Park.

Games continue throughout the day with the championship matches scheduled for Alemite. The B title will be decided at 6 p.m. while the A championship is set for 7:30 p.m.

Kinsmen are busy tuning up for the Saturday test and in a recent match with the Napanee Ryan squad, came up with a 14-9 win.

Bobby Turner and Allan Thompson shared the Belleville pitching, recording 12 strikeouts while walking eight. Mike Finn took the loss.

Dennis Tam hammered a home run and added a pair of singles for Kinsmen while Stephen Smith checked in with four singles and Billy Curry, three. Peter Wood slammed a triple.

Minor Lacrosse

Esso Car Wash And Dairy Queen Come Up Big

The Dairy Queen and Esso Car Wash put together fine efforts to win Bantam games in the Belleville Minor Lacrosse Associations Tyke-Novice Division recently.

Dairy Queen defeated Quinte Mall 11-4 with Doug Burley and Rob Brooks scoring four goals apiece.

Mike Phillips put out a fine effort for the losers, scoring four times.

Esso Car Wash took their win 11-9 with Jim Thompson popping in six goals and Peter Little scoring five for the winners.

Don Dufoe was especially effective for the losers, as he scored so less than all nine of his team's markers.

In the Midget age division Local 183 defeated A and D Esso 17-6.

Wally Iswood had seven goals for the winners while Chris Rutledge came up with six.

In Bantam play an excellent effort by Steve Marsh's team failed as Deseronto was beaten by Cornerstone 5-3.

Bill Reis and Steve Slaughter scored two goals apiece for the winners.

Bud Gill defeated Bob's Sports7-4 on a three goal effort by Dave Delanger. Mike Schmidt had two goals.

The Peewee division saw a 3-3 tie between the Maple Queen and Ponderosa, with goalies Bryson L'Antile and Brian Slaughter impressive in the nets.

The Police Association came up with a good effort to defeat Woodland Cleaners 8-2 in their league game.

Dave Potts scored both of the losers' goals.

On July 26 and 27 the McDonald's Invitational Bantam Tournament will be held at the Belleville Memorial Arena.

Top teams will come from Buffalo, Orillia, Nepean, Cornwall, Gloucester and of course Belleville to name a few.

Trophies will go to four teams and were donated by McDonald's, Bell Telephone, City Hotel and Marsh Insurance.

West Leaders Nip Mr. Jackets

2 Wins for London Dukes

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

London Dukes defeated St. Catharines Mr. Jackets 5-4 and 5-1 in Ontario Football League doubleheader Tuesday.

Meanwhile in Toronto, the Globals beat Hamilton Scrapers 3-2 in a 17-inning game that lasted for more than 3½ hours.

In Oshawa, Jim Murdock's 10th-inning single drove in Terry Gallamore with the winning run as Kitchener Evergreens beat the Tonys 2-1.

At London, the Dukes' Jim Brown hit a two-run home run in the first inning of the opener and a solo homer in the third to bring his season total to six.

Catcher Don Hitchenbach hit his fifth home run of the season for St. Catharines in the fifth inning of the first game.

St. Catharines' first run came in the second inning on two singles and a London error.

London's Don Dominas was the winning pitcher in the first game and Dave Fransen took the loss.

In the second game, Brown came home on a single from Bruce Everest and Bob Hagach scored his first run of the season.

London pitcher Dick Hannes got his fifth win of the season.

In Toronto, the winning run was scored by Lee Gould in the bottom of the 17th. He got on first on an error by Fran Stuart, advanced to second on a ball throw and scored on an error by shortstop Jim Thompson. Toronto scored in the bottom of the first inning but Hamilton took the lead in the top of the fourth with two runs.

The game was tied in the bottom of the eighth inning on a run by Gerry Rayerall.

Peterborough Squad Sparked by Plunkett

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Steve Plunkett scored six goals Tuesday, leading Peterborough Gray-Munros to a 29-13 win over St. Catharines Legionnaires in Ontario Lacrosse Association Junior A action.

In another game, Mississauga Chiefs defeated Lakeshore Maple Leafs 21-10.

At Peterborough, Dan Eastman scored five goals for the Gray-Munros while Mark Villarelli, Randy Bryan and Moe Jodoin each had three.

Bob Watson and Gord Duncan each scored a pair and single goals went to Greg Lustic, Dan Green, Bob Short, Steve Byers and Paul Evans.

Tom Patrick with six goals and Joe Martini, with four, led St. Catharines. Mike McGrath, Don Bickers and Dan Pearl added single goals.

Peterborough took period leads of 11-3 and 17-9.

At Lakeshore, top scorers for Mississauga were Rick Halliday and Rob Gemmell, each with three goals and five assists. George Chandler got four goals and three assists and Mick Hicks two goals and one assist.

Lakeshore's top scorers were Joe Sheeran and Pete Collins with two goals and one assist each. Ted Hopkins had four assists.

Winning goaltender was Fred Gardner and Greg Kelly took the loss.

Drut Takes Foster

PARIS (AP) — Guy Drut of France beat arch-rival Charles Foster of the United States by more than six feet to win the 110-metre hurdles, opening event of an international track meet Tuesday.

Drut's time of 13.40 seconds on the rain-soaked track was well below American Rod Milburn's world record of 13.10. Foster finished in 13.87.

More than 8,000 spectators attended the meet despite a violent thunderstorm which swept across Paris less than two hours before the first events.

Drut and Foster are principal contenders for the 110-metre hurdles gold medal at the Montreal Olympics next year. In their six encounters this season, Drut has won three times and Foster twice. In one race both fell.

In the 400-metre hurdles, Jim Bolding of the U.S. took first in 49.55, ahead of France's Jean-Claude Analette, second in 49.37.

In the 100-metres, Don Quarrie of Jamaica was first in 10.30, ahead of Guyana's Gilkes, second in 10.35, and American Steve Williams, third in 10.39.

Marie France Dubois of France won the women's 800 metres in 2:00.2, ahead of France Larrieu of the U.S., second in 2:05.1.

New Zealand's John Walker won the 1,000 metres in a heating Rick Wanderer of the U.S., second in 2:20.3.

Potent Power Play

OWEN SOUND, Ont. (CP) — Owen Sound North Stars scored 10 power-play goals in hasting Niagara-Brantford Warriors a 24-9 setback in an Ontario Lacrosse Association Senior series game Tuesday.

The win put the North Stars into a second-place tie with Ferguson Thistles but the Stars have two games in hand.

The winners jumped off to a 9-2 lead in the first period and led 17-7 at one end of the second.

Doug Zonneville led Owen Sound with five goals followed by Ken Tyler and Scott Cameron with three. Hugh Prentice, Doug Maynard, Terry Keeling and Norm Hope added two goals each. Single goals went to Mike Lachapelle, Thom Vann, Dave Lytle, Dave Forster and Ardie Rymerson.

For Warriors, John Mourdian had three goals, Tony Gobian two and Leo Nieuwland, Mike Arnold, Mike French and Al Thompson one each.

Finks Supports The Rozelle Rule

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The National Football League's Rozelle Rule is helping to keep teams in cold-weather areas such as Minnesota and Green Bay, Jim Finks of Chicago Bears said in federal court Tuesday.

Finks, executive vice-president and general manager of the Bears, was the latest in a parade of league witnesses arguing that NFL rules are designed to preserve a competitive balance within the league.

Finks said elimination of the Rozelle Rule—named after NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle — would be the "beginning of the end" of the NFL as it now exists.

"I think Minnesota would be a problem," he said. "I think Green Bay would be a problem. I think you would find many clubs unable to keep op-

The Rozelle allows the NFL commissioner to award clubs choices or players when a player completes his contract and signs with another team. The commissioner steps in to set compensation only when the two teams are unable to come to terms on their own.

The rule is being challenged by a group of current and former players on grounds the rule violates federal anti-trust laws.

"The clubs with the resources would get the superstars . . . you'd find three or four clubs with all the superstars," Finks said. "The rest would be playing with castoffs."

The players' suit contends that Rozelle's authority to set fees are geniously free to market their services after playing out the option year beyond their contracts. By setting the compensation too high, Rozelle can, in effect, force a player to renegotiate with his former employers, the suit contends.

Als Tie B. C. Lions 14 - 14

Wilkinson Leads Eskimos

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Edmonton Eskimos made their early lead stand up but Montreal Alouettes watched theirs evaporate and settled for a tie in Canadian Football League exhibition action Tuesday night.

The Eskimos built a 27-0 lead in the first half and coasted to a 30-14 victory over Hamilton Tiger-Cats at Edmonton.

The Als went ahead 8-0 in the first half but had to scramble to emerge with a 14-14 tie against British Columbia Lions.

The exhibition schedule continues tonight with Saskatchewan Roughriders visiting Ottawa Rough Riders and Calgary Stampeders meeting the Blue Bombers in Winnipeg. B.C. moves on to visit Toronto Argonauts on Thursday night.

Veteran quarterback Tom Wilkinson directed the Eskimos' early surge, starting with a nine-yard touchdown pass to fullback Roy Bell.

Edmonton defensive end Leroy Jones intercepted a pass by Hamilton's Bill Eiler and ran 26 yards for the second touchdown and running back Leroy Moore carried four yards for the third.

Dave Cutler added field goals from 50 and 37 yards in the first half and from 13 in the fourth quarter as well as converts on all three touchdowns.

The late Hamilton rally consisted of two touchdown passes by rookie quarterback Jim McMillan. He fired 18 yards to Jack McKeown in the third quarter and 10 yards to Garney Henley in fourth. Ian Sauter kicked both converts.

Hamilton, gaining only 29 yards rushing throughout the game, failed to cross midfield in the first half and seemed to have problems under the direction of veteran Eiler and Jim Stoeckel.

Eskimo quarterbacks Bruce Lemmerman and rookie Dennis Morrison also failed to move the ball effectively.

Several fights broke out in the game and Hamilton's Adey Curtie and Edmonton's Tom Lapatka, Joe Worobec and Jones were ejected.

At Montreal, the Als took the lead with a second-quarter touchdown by Johnny Rodgers on a 13-yard pass from veteran Dave Lewis while Don Sweet kicked the convert and a first quarter single.

The Lions came back with Lou Harris's two-yard touchdown run in the third quarter and the Als replied with a 38-yard touchdown pass from Jimmy Jones to Joe Petty early in the fourth but Sweet's convert attempt failed.

Veteran quarterback Pete Lake then fired an eight-yard touchdown pass to Ross Clarkson and John Wintermeyer kicked his second convert to tie the game.

On the last play of the game, the Lions' Ivan MacMillan picked wide on a 16-yard field goal attempt. Montreal's Dave Elliott kicked the ball out of the end zone. B.C.'s Rocky Long kicked it back and Montreal's Ward Smith ran it back out to avoid a Lions single and preserved the tie.

The new league rule that allows restricted blocking on punt returns helped Alouette running back Wayne Mccoley make a big impression. He had several good runbacks, including a 62 yard run to the B.C. 26-yard line in the second quarter.

Wings Share Third

PHILADELPHIA (CP) — Zenny Lipinski scored four goals to pace Philadelphia Wings to a 139 win over Quebec Caribous in the only National Lacrosse League game Tuesday night.

The win moved the Wings into a third-place tie with Maryland Arrows at 28 points, eight behind the leading Long Island Tomahawks. Maryland has two games in hand over Philadelphia.

Jimmy Higgs and Brian Wilson scored two goals each for the Caribous, outshot 41-35.

Shorter Schedule? No Way!

TORONTO (CP) — The National Hockey League schedule cannot be shortened for the 1975-76 season because of the economic situation, says president Clarence Campbell.

The NHL Players' Association would like the 80-game schedule played in a reduced time period so the Stanley Cup would end around mid-May instead of late in the month as it did this year.

"The owners undoubtedly would like to shorten things, too, but the inevitable economic situation is against it," says Campbell. "The 80 games could be compressed in the future but, at least, a week could be lopped off."

The NHL owner-player council meets here Friday followed by a board-of-governors' meeting at which the governors hope to approve new owners for Pittsburgh Penguins and California Seals.

Also in contention is a decision made earlier this year by the general managers who set the team rosters at 17 skaters and two goaltenders, the number dressed for each game. The association wants 21 players on the rosters.

"The players want to see training camps open Sept. 15, the schedule start Oct. 1 and end March 31," said Al Eagleson, the association's executive director. "They feel strongly that the Stanley Cup final should be concluded by May 15, not two weeks later as it was last season.

"The players have offered to take a proportionate reduction in salary if the schedule is cut to 70 games."

Campbell says: "Many teams are having financial problems and a pro-rata salary reduction according to the number of games played isn't the answer.

"Last season, teams paid 41 per cent of their budgets in salaries for 80 games. If the schedule were cut to 70 games, a pro-rated salary schedule still would cost the clubs the same percentage of the budget."

In 1972-73—the last season before the World Hockey Association arrived—the teams paid 35 per cent of their budgets in player salaries, he said.

Campbell said the roster numbers are negotiable but named a 20-player limit as the sticking point.

"I think the general managers looked at it this way: The easiest way to reduce their payrolls was to cut off two players, rather than taking a percentage of each salary. If a team carries 18 players instead of 20, then it's a 10-per-cent salary reduction.

"But most teams can figure on having at least one injured player much of the time over the season. Our protected lists now call for 18 skaters and two goalies, one more than can be dressed for games and that could be where agreement is reached."

The governors are expected to welcome Albert Savoli, a Cleveland, Ohio, mortgage banker, and Marvin J. Gross, which will purchase the Pittsburgh franchise for $8.8 million, plus a $600,000 tab for an NHL membership card.

The Penguins went into bankruptcy receivership last month with a debt of $8.5 million.

ONT. PLAYER CHOSEN

NEW YORK (CP) — Kelly Roberts of London, Ont., is one of 10 players selected on the 10-man 1975 all-American collegiate golf team, Roberts, competing this week in the Ontario amateur golf tournament at Kitchener, Ont., is a senior at the University of Indiana. He won the Ontario title in 1972 and 1973. Collectively, the all-Americans have won 36 titles this year.

SIGN PRICE

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — New York Islanders announced Tuesday the signing of defenseman Pat Price, their first round choice in last month's National Hockey League draft. Price, 20, played last season with Vancouver Blazers, now Calgary Cowboys, of the World Hockey Association, scoring five goals and 29 assists. He agreed to a long-term contract estimated at $60,000 a year.

ANDY CAPP

Ontario Amateur Leader Surprised

KITCHENER, Ont. (CP) — Mike Masella of Toronto, the 20-year-old first-round leader of the Ontario amateur championship at Westmount Golf and Country Club, was pleasantly surprised Tuesday after shooting nines of 35-35 for a two-under par 70.

"I usually don't play a tight course like Westmount well," said the junior finance student at Indiana University. "My putting is usually pretty good and my driving is the weak spot but today my whole game was pretty solid.

"I'm more confident in my game now," he said. "I just step up to the ball and let it go. You can't score well on this course if you hack off."

Masella is one shot ahead of Ted Pease of London who had a one-under-par 71 on a 6,681-yard, par-72 course, two shots ahead of Gary Cowan, the home course favorite who is tied for third with four other golfers.

Cowan, four-time Ontario and twice U.S. amateur champion, had an even-par 73 first round, but he was scrambling. His biggest problem seemed to be his putting.

"I had it all around the hole but they just didn't want to drop," he said. "It kept up all day."

Cowan started with two bogeys on the first two holes but lost his early lead with a double-bogey six on the 440-yard seventh hole. He also birdied the 12th and 17th but bogeyed the 15th to finish with nines of 37-35.

Kelly Roberts of London, winner of this event in 1972 and 1973, also shot 72 but was dissatisfied with his round. "I played better than I scored," he said.

Also tied at 72 are Wayne Kimura of Toronto, Rod Spittle of Port Erie and Les Westlake, Niagara Falls.

Nick Weslock of Burlington, seven-time former champion, shot a 77.

The field, down to 125 after two players withdrew, will be cut to the low 60 and ties after today's round and further cut to the low 40 golfers and ties for the final round Friday.

Golfers Looking for Rain But Nicklaus Is Happy

CARNOUSTIE, Scotland (AP) — One hundred and fifty of the world's top golfers teed off for the 104th British Open championship today.

And 149 of them were praying that British five-week drought would end, the rain would fall and Carnoustie's tree-barren course would soften up.

The odd man out was Jack Nicklaus, the biggest hitter in the modern game. He has been burning up the 7,065-yard, par-72 course in practice and, over the last two days, has turned in an unofficial 24-under-par 264 for four rounds.

He'd be more than happy if things stayed as they are, with the fairways hard and the greens true—and his power game allowed its head.

"I'm a bit surprised to find a course this fast and with no rough," he said later. "But I've never yet seen a British Open when the weather conditions didn't play a big part in the scoring."

Nicklaus is considered the man to beat in the chase for the $16,500 top prize. Twice a British Open winner—in 1966 and 1970—and four times a runner-up, he was rated by Britain's legal bookmakers at odds of 7 to 2 to win a third.

But the weather forecast was for some rain, which would slow the course and leave things wide open for a field that included last year's champion, South African Gary Player, who won last time the Open was played here seven years ago.

Population Rise Creates Oil Town Social Problems

FORT MCMURRAY, Alta. (CP)—The population boom in this northeastern Alberta town, brought on by development of the Athabasca oil sands, has created major problems in the areas of social services, schooling and recreational facilities.

Owners of mobile homes, which constitute about 30 per cent of the town's dwelling units, are upset about the lack of recreation facilities for their use.

They also want the town to change zoning laws, which are unresponsive to the requirements of mobile-home dwellers, and want more land freed for potential mobile-home developments, since hundreds of people are expected to need housing in the community.

Development of social services, such as day-care, social and psychological treatment and counselling services, is also lagging far behind the population growth, which is expected to double to 25,000 in at least four years.

"We're even lacking the services to meet what is a crisis situation now," said John Harper, director of the town's preventive social services program, which co-ordinates virtually all the town's social services.

A study of Fort McMurray's criminal justice services needs, commissioned by the solicitor-general's office, was released last month. It was critical of the shortcomings of almost every social service agency in the community.

Lack of finances has led the public and separate school boards in the town to seek government help. Jerry Hext, head of the Roman Catholic system, says the schools are unable to cope with the social and psychological needs of the students.

BC Hires Retired Mounties To Collect Overdue Fines

VANCOUVER (CP)—The British Columbia government has established a fine collection agency staffed mainly by retired RCMP officers.

The agency is a branch of the attorney-general's department called the civil enforcement of fines division, and it's meant to deal with people who don't pay provincial fines.

It began operating in May and in a month about $1,300 in fines owing on violations of provincial statutes.

Under revised legislation in the Summary Convictions Act, judges normally cannot jail persons convicted of breaking provincial or municipal laws. If offenders default on fines, they must be sued in civil court for debt.

Lorne Newson, chief enforcement officer for the division, said people who can pay their fines but haven't done so will be taken to small claims court. If they do not comply with the requests of his staff,

If the fine still is not paid, the offender can be ordered by the court to be jailed for up to 10 days, and ordered to pay the $20-a-day cost of incarceration. An RCMP pensioner in 1974 after 30 years' service, said the division endeavors to be passionate with persons having genuine difficulty in paying their fines.

He said he doubts the money collected by the division will meet the cost of collecting it.

"We will be prepared to spend a reasonable number of man hours in some cases to collect even the smallest of fines because we cannot leave the impression with people who would exploit a given situation that there would be no effort to enforce a judgment against them," he said.

But he thinks the new system will be less expensive than the old policy of immediately incarcerating persons who left fines unpaid.

COREY — Mr. and Mrs. Donald Corey of Frankford, are pleased to announce the arrival of their baby girl, Alicia Lee, Saturday, June 28, 1975 at 9:32 p.m. weighing in at 7 lbs. 12 ozs. Proud parents are Valerie and Jim Belanock. A niece for Janice.

PETERSON — John and Marilyn (Ostrander) are happy to announce the birth of their daughter, Nicole Ann, 8 lbs., 9½ ozs. on Friday, July 4, 1975. A sister for Linda.

IN MEMORIAM

BUTLER — In loving memory of a dear sister Marjorie, who passed away July 9, 1974.
Memory drifts to scenes long past,
Time rolls on but memories last.
Sunshine passes, shadows fall,
Leaves memories we recall.
—Sadly missed and always remembered by sister Jean and nieces Cathy and Susan.

BUTLER — In loving memory of a dear wife and mother Marjorie, who passed away July 9, 1974.
The depths of sorrow we cannot tell,
Of the loss of one I loved so well.
One glance at her empty chair brings
Her memory back to her loved ones.
—And the girl I loved still remains
In my heart always, husband Bob.

BUTLER — In loving memory of a dear sister Marjorie. Marjorie Butler who passed away July 9, 1973.
Time flies over like the wind, swiftly
That the hills were hard to climb.
Our sorrow is silent, our loss is
And whispers, "Peace to thee."
Away in the beautiful hills of God.
By the valley and the flowing tide,
Some time, some day, we know not where We shall meet and love as of old —Ever remembered by Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Butler, Trenton Ontario.

BUTLER — In loving memory of a dear memento Marjorie Kathleen Butler, who passed away July 9, 1974.
The touch of memorie's hand will always remain while God keeps her safe in Heaven.
Her smile will always be their dear in our hearts for ever and ever.
—Daughter Maria, sons Steven and Alan.

CLARKE — In loving memory of our dear mother Emily M. Clarke who passed away July 9th, 1942.
Some dear memory to-day we miss.
Away from all care and pain,
Where we shall see our dear mother,
Until we meet again.
—Sadly missed by Ernest, daughter Ethel and daughters-in-law Lilian and Vera and family.

SLINGERLAND — In loving memory of a dear father and grandfather Charles Henry Slingerland who passed away on July 9, 1949.
Sweet is the memory,
Of a loved one gone to rest,
And those who think of him today,
And those who loved him best.
The flowers we lay upon his grave,
Will fade and decay,
But the love for him who has departed,
Will never fade away.
—Fondly remembered by Hazel, Ethel and Julia.

SIDDIGHAM
WALKER — In loving memory of a dear husband, father and grandfather Frank Walker-who passed away one year ago, July 9, 1974.
One year ago, quietly, one year ago,
We bowed our heads to bear
To the closed lips, forms around you,
And whispered, "Come home to Me."
—Ever remembered by wife Hilda, daughters, son and families.

BUTLER — In loving memory of a dear sister and aunt, Marjorie, who passed away July 9, 1974.
Memory drifts to scenes long past,
Time rolls on but memories last.
Sunshine passes, shadows fall,
Leaves memories we recall.
Loved's remembrance outlasts all.
—Sadly missed but never forgotten, Jack and Joyce Stapler and family and Ken and Evelyn Stapler and family.

BUTLER — In loving memory of a dear sister Marjorie who passed away July 9, 1974.
Memory drifts to scenes long past,
The memory ever dear.
And ever the grave in loving grief,
Shall fall a silent tear.
—Lovingly remembered and sadly missed, sister Dorothy.

BUTLER — In loving memory of my dear sister Marjorie who passed away July 9, 1974.
Sweet is the hour, I'm with loved her,
Not lost, but gone before.
She lives with us in memory,
And will forever more.
—Sadly missed by sister Lil and husband.

IN MEMORIAM

BUTLER — In loving memory of our dear daughter Marjorie, who passed away July 9, 1974.
You do not need a special day,
To bring you to our mind.
For you are with us every thing of you,
We very hard to find.
If all this world were ours to give,
We'd give it, yes, and more,
To see the face of Marjorie dear,
Upon our door once more.
—Sadly missed and always remembered, Mom and Dad.

BUTLER — In loving memory of our dear daughter Marjorie who passed away one year ago, July 9, 1974.
Gone are the days we used to share,
But in our hearts you are always there.
The gates of memory will never close
We miss you more than arrows know,
With tender love and deep regret,
We who loved you will never forget.
—Lovingly remembered and sadly missed by sister Marion, Jim, Robert, and Paul.

CARDS OF THANKS

Mr. and Mrs. Reginald W. Carver would like to send their sincere thanks to Dr. W. Seward for the safe delivery of their daughter Lisa on June 28, 1975. Phillips to Direct Opera

OTTAWA (CP) — Robin Phillips, new artistic director of the Stratford Festival, will direct a touring production of Verdi's La Traviata for the Canadian Opera Company next spring, Jan Rubes, the company's touring director, has announced.

Rubes, directing a month-long cabaret show of lyric opera excerpts at the National Arts Centre, said in an interview that Phillips will prepare the new production of one of Verdi's most popular operas next March.

It will join the touring company's current production of Puccini's La Boheme on a tour of Ontario during April. Beforehand, however, the company will take La Boheme and a review show of opera excerpts on a tour of Newfoundland and the Maritime provinces—opening in Wabush, Nfld., late in October.

Phillips became artistic director of the Stratford Festival last fall, and first directed two up-tempo versions of Shakespeare's comedies, The Two Gentlemen of Verona and The Comedy of Errors, for a tour of western Canada.

They now are running at the Stratford Festival in the Avon Theatre, and were joined last month by a dramatically new production of Measure for Measure, also directed by Phillips.

Though his appointment was controversial because it meant bringing a young British director to take over Canada's leading theatre, Phillips' productions have won general acclaim from the critics.

He has directed opera previously in Britain, but Rubes said this will be his first opera work in Canada. Rubes said Phillips' intentions to present dramatic works in ways more becoming to popular audiences fits nicely with the touring work of the Canadian Opera Company.

After its fall Atlantic tour, the touring group will spend two months touring the U.S. under the aegis of Columbia Artists. It then will move into the Shaw Festival Theatre at Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ont., for three weeks in March to prepare La Traviata.

It is a story of the love of a rich noblemen's son for a courtesan who throws him over out of respect for the father, only to confess her love as she dies of consumption. It is set to some of Verdi's most popular, humable music.

Art Show Opens

OTTAWA (CP) — Julian Grey of Montreal has been painting for three years, and Wednesday he got to open an art show including four of his works.

Julian, who is nine years old, opened a display of children's art in the lobby of the National Capital Commission building in downtown Ottawa.

The 133 works on display were gathered by All About Us, a government-supported organization promoting creativity among young Canadians.

Its co-ordinator is Betty Nickerson, a sociologist who believes adults can become more aware of the country's needs through writings and drawings of their children—if they'll only read and look.

Julian Grey began drawing three years ago while on a trip to Europe with his parents. For this summer's show, he painted four pictures, with felt-tipped pens, showing his Montreal house and neighborhood during the four seasons.

Grenda Craig, 10, of Montreal, B.C., entered a poster picturing the high cost of living—a grocery store with shelves filled with fruit, jam and pop, and a cash register with a long paper tally spilling on to the floor.

Laurel McCubbin, 14, of Toronto, created an eight foot mural of bits of felt sewn on to silk, giving her interpretation of a poster prepared professionally for next summer's UN Conference on Human Settlements, to be held in Vancouver.

It shows a question mark with the earth as its dot, the development of man from prehistoric times and agricultural life in the day's big cities, and the future overcrowding of the world—with people falling off.

Showbiz Shorts

BERLIN (AP) — In an unusual movie premiere Sunday, an actor from across the Communist wall dividing Berlin was screened for the first time in the 25-year-history of West Berlin's annual Berlinale Film Festival.

Jakob the Liar, based on a novel by East German author Jurek Becker and produced by fellow countryman Frank Beyer of the Defa State Film Concern, tells the tale of Jewish ghetto inhabitants under Nazi rule in 1941.

NEW YORK (AP) — Audrey Gellen Maas, co-producer of the motion picture, Alice Doesn't Live Anymore, died Wednesday at New York Hospital. She was 41.

Mrs. Maas, who was married to author Peter Maas, was a producer with David Susskind's Talent Associates.

Besides the movie, she co-produced with Susskind the television specials Mom for the Mistlegolden and The Power of the Glory. They currently were producing Eleanor and Franklin for television.

Her husband is the author of the Serpico and The Valachi Papers.

Your Horoscope

By BERNICE BEDE OSOL

For Thursday, July 10

ARIES (March 21-April 19) There's no reason to pick up too entire tab today for a fun activity with friends. Let each pay a fair share.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Be extra-patient with members of your household, even though they may pull a few stunts that will exasperate you. You can handle things.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Don't rehash an old, irritating issue with a person in your charge today. Forgiveness will win you an ally.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) If shopping today be careful when it comes to novelty merchandise. There's a good chance you'll buy something you'll never use.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Avoid the company today of one whose ghala are not in harmony with yours. It won't be worth the effort to try and convince him you're right.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) It's to your advantage to play a little hard-to-get today in your dealings. Let them come to you for a change.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) It's not a good day to make requests of a material nature from your friends. It may prove embarrassing when you're turned down.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Unfortunately you can't base a major decision today on whether you tread upon toes in your one's love life. First, protect your own interests.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) A co-worker today will have a rather sharp tongue. He can be won over easily if you react tactfully, not angrily.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You'll profit more in the long run today if you think in terms of what's best for all concerned, rather than "What's in it for me?"

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) You have a tendency today to jump to conclusions. You hasty assumptions could create a problem.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) This can be a very productive period if you don't try to hold Rome in one day. Mistakes are likely if you rush yourself.

Rheumatic Fever Serious Problem

By G. C. THOSTESON, MD

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Is there any way you can tell me and my husband how we can be of help with his younger brother. He is 19 and has rheumatic fever. He came down with it at the age of 18. It still bothers him. His doctor has put him on penicillin. I thought people with this were born with it. Is this true?

He has a hard time maintaining a job that requires physical activity, and after such activity his arms will start swelling and he is worn out. Is there any way we can be of help so he can lead an normal, happy life and be able to participate in sports, for example?—MRS. B.

This is a difficult problem. Much more information is needed. But I can offer some general thoughts.

Rheumatic fever is caused by the streptococcal germ. Patients are not born with it—it is an "acquired" disease.

Usually there is an initial attack followed in some cases by such things as St. Vitus dance (chorea) and heart involvement. The latter occurs in about a half of the cases, stemming from the initial attack or from a subsequent one. You don't say whether there has been any heart involvement, but I can assume from your letter that there has been some.

This can affect the heart muscle proper or the lining of the valves, the latter referred to as rheumatic valvular heart disease. This can have an obvious and often long effect on the efficiency of heart action, and thus alter a person's lifestyle. And this, I presume, is your main concern at the moment.

Recurrent attacks can follow with subsequent strep infections—of the throat, tonsils, or perhaps following dental extraction. Hence, in the future, prompt treatment will be required for such infections and steps taken to guard against them as much as possible.

You say the doctor has prescribed penicillin. This is a treatment of choice. Recurrent attacks can be forestalled with monthly injections of benzathine penicillin G. This must be continued for from two to three years at least, for life in some cases.

There is not much more you can do to help the young man beyond making him understand his condition and the need for careful attention to it.

I presume his doctor has discussed this with him, but I may take exceptional meaning.

He may have to resign himself to a life of relative inactivity, depending on the degree of heart damage, and in this you can play a supportive role.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Can body lice be transferred through use of bathroom facilities? I have been told the only way they can be spread is through sexual contact, from bedding or sharing the clothing of someone who has them. V.W.

Body lice confine themselves to the hairy parts of the body, and the most common sites are the genital areas and the head. They cling to the hair shafts and are difficult to dislodge. However, they can rub off on to clothing, headgear and bedclothes and survive long enough to be transferred.

The toilet seat notion is popular but not correct. The lice would not forsake the natural body environment for one so inhospitable.

Hence, no more par

Incidentally, the lice problem has increased roughly 800 percent in the last 10 years. The popularity of long hair among men may be a factor since men, or more particularly youngsters, have not been accustomed to the added hygiene required to keep such locks free of vermin. Increased sexual promiscuity may be another contributing factor since, as you suggest, sexual contact is a classic means of transmitting the body lice from person to person.

"What sort of free bid was that? roared North. "Only 13 high-card points and there you were way up at the three level."

"It turned out to be very costly," replied South. "We had a game, slam and rubber waiting for us and you had to bid seven and throw it all away."

"If you had just passed over East's two hearts, I would have bid three clubs and we would have reached the slam," continued North.

"Right," said South. "We also would have everything if you hadn't hung me for bidding three clubs."

The argument may still be going on so we will try to adjust it for you, our readers.

If East had not stuck in his two-heart bid, South would merely have rebid to two clubs. When he did bid two hearts South was given a choice. He could pass and maybe never get to show his club suit or he could bid at the three level.

This time the pass would have worked out better, because North rewarded it as a sound seven. Your in and your out the bid will be the winning action.

Ask the Jacobys

Question from Maine: I hold: ♠ Q 10 4 ♥ 1 2 5 ♦ A K 8 7 ♣ 2 9 3.

Our opponents reached four spades with no bidding by either my partner or myself. Should I have doubled?

This is the sort of question that is impossible to answer really well because we don't have enough information. How did the bidding go? Who was on lead?

After some bidding sequences a double is mandatory. After others, you should pass if your double may tell declarer how to play and make the contract. We suggest you do nothing after our correspondent stuck in a double.

Master Minter Gives Rare Gift to Canada

OTTAWA (CP) — Usually when a civil servant retires he is the only one to receive a gift in mark the occasion.

But when Gordon Hunter retired recently the federal government also received a well-come and rare gift—a profitable Crown corporation.

Mr. Hunter, a civil servant for 25 years, the last 4½ as master of the Royal Canadian Mint in Ottawa, retired June 1 with a balance sheet in the black.

Under his direction the mint has shown total profits of $34 million since 1970. Annual sales of the mint's products—its profits are earned on the export of coins—have increased to $37.7 million from $7.4 million in that time.

"It may be a record for Crown corporation to show a profit," Mr. Hunter said in an interview. "We're really proud of our record over the past five years."

Production of coins has increased through the years 1970-75.

"At the mint in Ottawa we now are producing about 1 million day 5½ days a week. Our payroll has gone from 250 to 750 employees.

"The increased production at the Ottawa mint has necessitated its expansion and in September a second mint will be officially opened in Winnipeg. The Winnipeg mint will be producing one-cent, 10-cent and 25-cent pieces.

Before his retirement, Mr. Hunter committed the mint to an agreement to strike 50 million coins of numismatic quality to mark the 1976 Olympics in Montreal.

The volume, if achieved over the three-year schedule, will be a world record, he said.

Prior to joining the mint in January, 1970, Mr. Hunter served as deputy minister of the defence production department.

Sikhs Lured With Promises Of Big Wages

By RAM SUNDAR
CP Correspondent

BOMBAY (CP) — Hundreds of Indian villagers are being lured to Persian Gulf countries by promises of big wages, officials report.

Bombay Times called it "Sikh-canning" since most of the workers are burly Sikhs from the north Indian state of Punjab.

There is a big demand for Indian workers in the Arab countries. The bearded Sikhs are particularly in demand since they work hard, are disciplined and create no trouble for employers.

The Indian police have been investigating reports that a gang of recruiting agents has been exploiting Sikh villagers desirous to supplement their income.

The gang is said to charge anything from $200 to $700 to arrange the necessary formalities for the journey to Oman, Qatar, Bahrain and other Persian Gulf countries. The money is in addition to the air fare from Bombay.

The Sikhs are promised salaries ranging from $200 to $300 a month—a sizable sum according to Indian rural standards. But what they actually get is never more than $90.

"It is a genetic fraud," said Harcharan Singh of Ludhiana, Punjab, who returned to Bombay after a year in Oman where he was on a construction job.

Singh said that as soon as the Indians land in Oman their passports are seized by the agents. They are then forced to work under inhuman conditions for a year before being permitted to return.

"I had no particular interest in coins at the time," he said, "but I've learned a good deal since then."

Complete Safety

A new box that is claimed to completely safeguard against motorcycle and bicycle thefts has ben invented. The cycle-box, a 56-inch-high and 7¼-foot-long oblong box, took five months to perfect and according to Paul Countouris, president of Flamingo Fibreglass of Mississauga, Ont., only the key or a stick of dynamite can open it once shut. Box Prevents Cycle Thefts

TORONTO (CP) — A new box that is claimed to safeguard against motorcycle and bicycle thefts has been invented by Paul Countouris, president of Flamingo Fibreglass in suburban Mississauga.

The cyclebox, which took five months to perfect, can only be opened with a key or dynamite.

At a cost of $292, the 56-inch-high and 7¼ foot long oblong box with a plastic cover can hold one motorcycle or several bicycles. A box is being planned to hold a snowmobile.

"If someone tries to break into it," said Mr. Countouris, "it could take four hours with a sledge hammer."

Motorcycles are most feasible for the box, Jim Patterson, sales manager of the company, said. But he said a family in an apartment building could buy the box to lock their bicycles outside to avoid carrying them inside.

"We can foresee the possibility of having a box in a shopping centre," he said. "Shoppers could lock their bikes, motorcycles or purchases and put money in a meter."

The box goes on wheels and can be used as a trailer.

HIGH

Mr. Patterson said a motivating reason for the invention is the high cost of insurance for motorcycles. He said the company researched police and insurance group statistics and found that an average of one out of three motorcycles is stolen or damaged.

"Motorcycle insurance is a losing offer," said Mr. Patterson. "It just doesn't pay anymore to insure the bikes."

The company produces car bodies and sailboats but now plans to concentrate primarily on the cyclebox, said Mr. Patterson. He said the firm is ready to produce 10 to 20 boxes a day if demanded.

Currently, the only cyclebboxes produced are used for demonstrations to marketing companies interested in buying them.

Giving one reason for inventing the high security of the cyclebox, Mr. Countouris said, "It makes me so mad when kids just throw a bike or deliberately damage a motorcycle for no reason."

He said the future bike thief would have to be industrious and be armed with a stick of dynamite to break into the cyclebox.

Vicarage Guest House

CORNWALL, England (CP) — Rev. John Harper and his family are "camping out" in their vicarage garden for the summer because they have gone into the tourist business. They are letting out their four bedrooms for bed, breakfast and dinner. Harper waits at table and his wife Romola runs the cooking. "I don't wear my clerical collar when serving meals," said the vicar.

What if your pay cheque was late?

Your Intelligencer carrier is a young, independent businessman; he doesn't receive a pay cheque. His profit is the difference between the wholesale cost of his newspapers and the amount collected from his customers.
Most subscribers pay their carriers on the first call. But some people say "come back later" . . . and the carrier's profit is put off. It's like asking you to come back two or three times for your pay cheque.
For many of us this would be a calamity. Of course, you want to be paid promptly. All of us do. The boy or girl who delivers your Intelligencer will appreciate being paid promptly.

Free Trade Helps Canada

OTTAWA (CP) — Free trade would produce a gain of at least five per cent in the total value of national output, the Economic Council says in a special report urging government movement toward that goal.

Canadians are poorer because of the protection given the economy from foreign competition it says, adding that wages in some highly protected industries might fall under a free trade arrangement.

Agriculture and energy present two special problems, the report says liberalization should begin as soon as possible on farm products although it would exclude crude oil and natural gas — at least initially—from any free trade agreement.

Such an agreement, which would have to include the United States, should be undertaken gradually to avoid economic dislocation.

Hills Freed Today

KAMPALA (AP) — British lecturer Denis Hills, who was sentenced to death for calling Ugandan President Idi Amin a village tyrant, was freed by Amin today after the president met with British Foreign Secretary James Callaghan.

Callaghan met for more than an hour with Amin in Kampala, then drove with Hills to Entebbe airport, Lake Victoria's 20 miles away, where a Royal Air Force plane took them back to London.

Hills, 41, a longtime resident of Uganda who is reported to be suffering from cancer, told a British radio reporter after his release:

"I'm feeling very well. I'm very happy indeed."

Hills was arrested April 1 and convicted by a military court on treason for his remarks about Uganda's military president in an unpublished manuscript.

Amin announced that Hills would die before a firing squad July 4 but postponed the execution. He lifted the death sentence last week after President Mobutu of Zaire intercede on the Britons behalf.

Amin said Hills and the other 700 British subjects still living in Uganda are free. He threatened repatriation, but later said the Britons were welcome to stay and help develop the former British colony.

Drapeau Still Optimistic

Olympics to Pay Way

QUEBEC (CP) — Montreal Mayor Jean Drapeau said Wednesday that the 1976 Olympics can still be self-financing despite the latest figures showing costs should exceed revenues by at least $221 million.

Mr. Drapeau told the municipal affairs standing committee in the national assembly that the main obstacle to self-financing of the Games is the negative attitude of those who have been accepted that there will be a deficit.

Marcel Leger (PQ—Lotbinière) predicted a $400-million deficit and said the public must be informed now of the burden it will have to bear.

Revised cost estimates presented to the committee by Games organizers Wednesday showed the total costs, originally estimated at $310 million, now are set at $714.8 million.

The new total represents a sizable increase over figures filed with the committee last January. The total price tag at the time was estimated at $660 million and Mr. Drapeau had promised to try to trim the figure down to $600 million.

Revenue estimates have also increased from last January's more optimistic outlook of $455 million to a new maximum of $481 million.

Mayor Drapeau and his assistants hastened to point out that the Olympics project was not the only one to see its cost skyrocket. The CN tower in Toronto has soared from original estimates of $8 million to an expected total cost of $70 million, consulting engineer Berard Lamarre said.

As the hearings began in Quebec City, first reports began armilitee by Roger Rousseau, president of the Olympics organizing committee, showed the gold coins were expected to bring $25 to $40 million in revenue, said a commemorative postage stamps will produce $10 million in revenue, the organizing committee said.

The Olympic lottery, originally forecast to produce $25 million, has surpassed all expense for the financing of the Games.

Scotching of the gold coin program would cut total Olympic revenues to about $460 million.

A silver coin program already in existence is expected to generate $90 to $100 million while riving from Ottawa that the federal government has decided to abandon a project to mint commemorative gold coins for the Olympics.

Tables submitted to the com-mates have been upped to $227 million.

Both Mr. Leger and Fabien Roy, the Social Credit member for Beauce South, stressed the need to make Ottawa pick up a large part of the deficit.

Otherwise, it will be just another case where Canada gets the prestige and Quebec gets the bill," Mr. Leger said.

The Quebec and federal governments will gain millions of dollars in tourist and other benefits from the Games and it is only fitting that they pay part of the tab, Mr. Roy said.

Ottawa has so far refused to do more than help with the coin, stamp and security programs.

Cabinet to Make Wage Restraints

LONDON (Reuter) — The British cabinet meets today to approve a firm wage restraint policy to control inflation, and will almost certainly back it by law despite opposition from unions.

Union leaders approved a voluntary policy, By a 19-to-11 vote Wednesday, the general council of the Trades Union Congress supported a wage increase limit of $12.30 a week.

Most political observers agreed that the narrow majority would not be enough to convince the government that it could rely on the trade unions' voluntary co-operation.

They believed the cabinet meeting would insist on including legal powers to give bite to the wage policy.

But ministers were expected to accept the $12.30 limit on pay increases, rather than the 10-per-cent barrier which the government said last week it would enforce. The $12.30 limit is roughly 10 per cent of the average weekly wage.

After cabinet approval, the wage restraint measures will be announced Friday by Chancellor of the Exchequer Denis Healey.

If the government does decide on legal backing, it will face tough opposition from the left wing of the governing Labor party.

But in the week since it announced it would restrict wages, much has gone well for the government.

France Expels Cubans

PARIS (Reuter) — Three Cuban diplomats have been ordered to leave France in connection with the "Carlos affair" in which two French Secret Service men were shot to death two weeks ago.

The interior ministry, which announced the move, did not name the diplomats.

Police in France, Britain and several other countries are searching for a South American guerrilla called Ilich Ramirez Sanchez, alias Carlos Martinez, in connection with the killings at a Paris apartment.

The interior ministry did not give specific reasons for the expulsions, but added in a communique that large-scale police operations started today in Paris, the provincial city of Lyons and the mountainous Savoy region.

Rear-end Brakemen Keep Jobs

OTTAWA (CP) — The union representing crews on CN and CP freight trains has won at least a temporary delay in the companies' plans to eliminate the position of rear-end brakeman.

The right to eliminate the rear brakeman, leaving only a conductor at the end of freights, was granted in an arbitration award made in January by a retired judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Emmett Hall.

The United Transportation Union, facing the possibility of the loss of 3,000 jobs for members, challenged the ruling in the Federal Court if Appeal.

George McDevitt, a vice-president of the union, said the companies took take issue with the court's reasoning and raise the issue again.

New York Repeals Drug Law

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — The state Senate voted Wednesday to repeal a key section of one of the toughest anti-drug laws in the United States.

The bill would remove a plea bargaining ban and thus allow many drug offenders to escape mandatory life sentences required by the law, passed in 1973 with the backing of former governor Nelson Rockefeller.

The bill was approved in the Senate without debate and assembly approval was expected.

The rate of drug-related convictions has declined under the present law and opponents complained it was clogging the courts by making more jury trials necessary.

Olympic Gold Coin Held Up

OTTAWA (CP) — A bill authorizing the minting of Olympic gold coins to assist the financing the minting of Olympics could have been passed "in just a matter of two more hours in the House," Progressive Conservative Otto Jelinek said Wednesday.

It was just "childish game" Postmaster-General Bryce Mackasey was playing by abandoning plans to mint the coin, the MP representing Toronto High Park-Humber Valley said.

Mr. Mackasey told reporters Wednesday that opposition critics had held up the bill both in committee last week and in the Commons Tuesday.

Kidnappers Extend Deadline

BEIRUT (AP) — A note received by a news agency said today that the kidnappers of a United States Army colonel have decided on a 72-hour extension of their deadline to kill him if certain demands are not met by the U.S. government.

The note was sent to the office here of the French agency Agence France-Presse.

Sally Ann Camp Helps Alcoholics

By HARRY NULHALL
Staff Reporter

AMELIASBURGH — If a current program now underway at the Salvation Army summer camp on Roblin Lake here proves successful it could become an annual event.

Now enjoying a week's holiday at the camp in the summer are more than 60 participants in the Army's Harbrlight project from Toronto.

Harbrlight is the Salvationist rehabilitation program for alcoholics.

Since their arrival last Friday — some with families — the Harbrlighters have been involved in a program that involved in a program with a spiritual study and lectures, under Major Austin Miller, who heads the project. Swimming, boating and fishing have been available to the Toronto visitors.

The camp provides serenity and peaceful surroundings for them, said Capt. John Carew, camp director and recently-appointed youth director with the Army's mid-Ontario division in Belleville.

The key things are the relaxed atmosphere combined with the spiritual emphasis of the program," he said.

The project is a sequel to a first attempt last year to get the Harbrlighters into such surroundings, he said. At that time they were taken to a Salvation Army camp about 60 miles north of Orillia and close to Northern Ontario.

But the Roblin Lake facility is much closer to Toronto.

Food Board Challenges Egg Limit

OTTAWA (CP) — Accusing Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan of using threats and coercion in his dealings with the provinces, the Food Prices Review Board today challenged the government to account for its decision to limit the import of eggs from the United States.

In a statement, the board says import restrictions create a monopoly situation for Canadian producers that can be expected to drive up egg prices.

The board also asked if the government is concerned "with the minister of agriculture's use of coercion in threatening Alberta and New Brunswick" if they did not sign a national egg marketing agreement.

Radicals Worry Legion

OTTAWA (CP) — The Royal Canadian Legion wants assurance that foreign-born instructors are not filling students' heads with "distorted points of view or undesirable propaganda."

In a brief to the special parliamentary immigration committee, the legion also said draft dodgers should not be admitted to Canada because they have "demonstrated disloyalty to their country."

While the legion called for "a highly-restrictive immigration policy," Carleton University professor Jean Laponce said further economic growth will depend, to a large extent, on immigration.

Thurlow Donates To Arena

By JERRY BROWN
Staff Reporter

Thurlow Township council has passed a resolution to give almost $14,000 to the Stirling arena building fund.

The council voted Wednesday to accept the recommendation of the town's recreation committee and allocate $3,420 yearly in budget for the next four years.

The money will be given to Stirling for the $400,000 arena only if two conditions are met.

Construction of the arena must begin in 1976 and the decision is subject to approval by future councils.

Almost $141,000 has been raised so far from municipalities including a $75,000 provincial grant.

Construction in the new facility may begin as early as this fall if the project qualifies for a Local Initiative Project grant which must be exercised during the winter months.

"If not, we hope we can begin work next spring," said Jack Bush, member of the fund raising committee. "but we'll keep plugging along trying to raise money."

Hey Mac, Start the Furnace!

Personnel employed at a branch of the Department of Social Affairs in Quebec City go about their duties in swimwear Tuesday to protest what they felt were high temperatures inside the building. They said they would continue to work in like attire until an air conditioner is installed.

Westinghouse heat pump system can now be added to most gas, oil and electric furnaces
Here's how it works:
SUMMER — In hot weather, the Westinghouse Hi/Re/Li Heat Pump removes warm, muggy inside air to the outdoors - leaving your home cool and comfortable.
WINTER — In cool weather, the Westinghouse Hi/Re/Li Heat Pump absorbs available heat from outside air and transfers it into your home.
In colder weather, your furnace supplements the Westinghouse Hi/Re/Li Heat Pump to keep your home warm and comfortable.
If you are building a new home or replacing your present furnace, consider an all-electric Westinghouse Hi/Re/Li Heat Pump System. You'll enjoy year round home comfort and be ready for tomorrow's energy crisis.

Work Under Way On Medical Centre

TRENTON — Tenders for construction of a medical arts centre at King and Elgin Sts. were called today and a start on the three-storey building now is expected by early September, a spokesman for the company erecting the structure said Wednesday.

Estimates previously obtained from outside sources indicate the cost of the building might range between $800,000 and $900,000. The spokesman however, declined to reveal an estimated cost.

He said completion of the centre is expected six months after construction starts.

As a major tenant, it will house a Shoppers Drug Mart on the ground-level. On the two upper floors, approximately 19 suites for medical staff, a bio-chemist laboratory and facilities for x-ray equipment will be made available.

The centre planned for the site isascaledownversion site is a scaled down version of an original four or five-storey structure. Present plans call for the possible addition of a fourth storey at a later date.

A construction start had been expected in March this year, but a spokesman said in January the number of vacant offices in Trenton and economic conditions had delayed a start.

Explaining the Case

Consumer advocate Bill Hockley tells Quinte Information and Assistance Centre directors Wednesday that the centre handled 303 cases in June. Two thirds of all problems arose in Belleville, with the majority of the remainder coming from Trenton.

Township Still Firm On Payment for Road

By MARG HAYLOCK
Staff Reporter

AMELIASBURG — Ameliasburg Township council refuses to assume responsibility for a developer's "goof" at the expense of the taxpayer says Stan Goodfellow, chairman of council's roads committee, referring to controversy over the road in Quinte Shores sub-division.

A delegation representing approximately 50 home and cottage owners residing in the sub-division on Wellen's Bay met with township councillors Tuesday night to seek maintenance for the one-mile road leading to their doors.

Council does not plan to take over the road until it conforms with township standards, a provision stated earlier in agreements with developers involved with the sub-division.

Councillor Goodfellow said Wednesday, the delegation claimed a "snow job" from the township but he stressed the problem with the road relates to the developer.

He observed council has suggested a road could be built for approximately $14,000 or a cost of about $250 per dwelling, and costs billed under Local Improvement Act regulations. This would permit construction of a satisfactory road at no burden to other taxpayers.

"They have made their bed and now they must lie in it," commented councillor Goodfellow, referring to the residents of Quinte Shores.

He said under Local Improvement the road could be upgraded to township standards "in a one shot deal".

Councillor Goodfellow noted the township has offered to begin road improvements this fall with a target date for completion in the spring of 1976.

He expressed concern for and delays in the project as the inflation factor could put the cost of the work "out of sight" for Quinte Shores residents.

Township councillors have viewed the road during inspections and have agreed to take it over when it meets township standards.

Councillor Goodfellow suggested the delegation to council on Tuesday night was "grasping at straws" in its bid to have the township assume responsibility for road improvement.

"We are giving them a piece of iron," he added, referring to the proposal for sub-division residents to pay $250 per lot to finance the road's construction.

Some Firms Bilking Students Centre Says

By AL ZARAS
Staff Reporter

TRENTON — It is a "common thing" for students working summers to not to get what they are legally entitled to in wages and benefits under Employment Standards Act provisions, Bill Hockley said Wednesday.

The civic activist with the Quinte Information and Assistance Centre in Belleville said some employers are not keeping proper work records for students they hire.

He said some fire students five to nine weeks after they are taken on and then hire another student to take the first ones place.

The strategem is used to avoid bookkeeping necessary for employer and student payment of such items as unemployment insurance premiums.

Mr. Hockley said the Belleville centre has dealt with 11 Employment Standards Act violations in June. As the summer progresses, he expects to see more complaints by students.

Frequently, he said, students aren't getting the minimum wages provided for in the act.

In an effort to end such abuse, the Belleville centre may be undertaking an in-school program next year to inform students of their rights under the act, he said.

Mr. Hockley said the Hastings Board of Education is going to consider the group's involvement prior to summer holidays when students begin looking for work.

Driver Charged

PICTON — A Toronto man has been charged with careless driving following a two-car collision on Bridge St. Wednesday night that resulted in approximately $1,600 damage.

Charged is Dennis J. Vahey, 26, of 152 Dover Court Rd. Toronto.

Damage to the Hope car was estimated at $35 while damage to the Vahey vehicle was $250. Damage to the hydro pole was estimated at $100.

The accident occurred at 8:30 p.m.

Patrick Steps Down

FRANKFORD — Frankford councillor Robert Patrick has resigned from village council and has reportedly cited health reasons for his action. No decision has been made by council in its future method of replacing the councillor.

Larry Joins Firm

TRENTON —Former town clerk O. W. Larry has joined the sales staff of Quinte Transport Ltd. Mr. Larry, who has served Trenton for 27 years, retired late last year and his position was taken over by present clerk Aubrie Sharp.

4-H Plans Tour

BRIGHTON — Northumberland County 4-H Club members will visit the Ontario Hydro Lennox Generating Station at Bath July 15 as part of an annual club tour. Fort Henry and Frontenac owns, a Kingston raceway, will also be visited.

County Without Power

PICTON — A power blackout was experienced in Prince Edward County Wednesday afternoon through malfunction of the regulator on a feeder line at Rossmore

The town of Picton and outlying communities were without electricity for about three-quarters of an hour. The blackout occurred at approximately 12:40 p.m.

More Patrols Sought

PICTON — The Prince Edward County Board of Education has requested Picton town council to assist in providing greater police patrol on Princess Street in front of Prince Edward Collegiate Institute. A letter from business administrator E. A. Shortt recently informed council that traffic conditions near the school are "deteriorating". A motion to forward the trustees' letter to the police commission was carried.

Hay Brings Complaint

PICTON — An in-town hay field on Main Street West this week prompted complaints from a Picton woman who considers it town council's job to eliminate such eyesores automatically each summer.

In a letter to council, Mrs. Brian York observed the hay field is adjacent to the rear of her property and constitutes a fire hazard as well as a breeding ground for insects.

"Living in the town of Picton should have its advantages but by having a situation like this taken care of is apparently not one of them," stated Mrs. York

She added, "I must write to council each year to get action on something which I consider the fire chief should take care of automatically."

Picton reeve Larry Richardson told council he has inspected the field in question and noted "something should be done as it detracts from the area".

Town clerk Andrew Jarvis observed the land is owned by an out-of-town resident. Recently the tall grass in the field was cut but no work was done near the house standing on this site.

Council voted to ask fire chief Leonard Tripp to take action to ensure the lot is cleared.

Floor Poured

Workmen worked non-stop at the $5 million Century Place project Wednesday pouring yard after yard of cement for the first floor. A job spokesman said the project is on schedule and will meet its July, 1976, completion date.

Short-sighted Policies of Governments Hamper Search for New Oil Resources

By VINCENT EGAN

Business and Consumer Affairs Analyst

Thomson News Service

There must be something about the oil market that sends the blood rushing to the heads of politicians and makes them do strange things.

The world oil problem is not unduly complicated: The bulk of the world's supply is controlled by an Arab-dominated cartel, that could cut off supplies to customers at any time.

Big deposits of oil exist outside of the cartel's control. Examples: The far stretch of the Peace River area of Alberta and Saskatchewan, Alaska's Prudhoe Bay area, the North Sea between Britain and Norway.

The job of getting that oil from beneath the earth's surface and into your furnace or your car's gasoline tank takes expertise and capital on a big scale—more than can be marshalled to develop all of the known deposits.

The capital must come from profits—and so must the money that will attract the skilled people needed to do the job.

But politicians, in Ottawa and the major provincial capitals, evidently care little about the tiresome task of developing new deposits of oil.

The action of Ontario's Premier William Davis, in freezing gasoline and heating-oil prices until Oct. 1, almost seems to imply that the world will become coming to an end on that date.

If it were, the price freeze would be a welcome move. Consumers could live off known supplies until then, and there would be no need to go on keeping the pipelines full year after year.

But assuming that life is to go on and that no miracle substitute for petroleum-based energy is likely to be discovered by the end of September, the arbitrary move such as Ontario's price freeze can be self-defeating.

Since the beginning of July, oil refiners have been paying $8 a barrel for crude oil. Premier Davis has decreed that they must sell refined products in Ontario, at least—at the price they charged when they were paying $6.50 for their raw material.

Ontario's consumers thus get a short-range advantage—lasting, perhaps, until the next provincial election. But the oil industry is denied the financial return that it needs in orders to keep up its exploration and development activities.

Ontario is not alone in taking a short-sighted view of oil. Our federal government, as well as Alberta and Saskatchewan, have drastically increased their take from oil production, and put little back in the form of assistance to exploration activities.

Nor is short-sightedness a failing of Canadian politicians. The British treasury skims off the lion's share of North Sea oil production revenues, to such an extent that production beyond the limits of profitability may not be made.

The Canadian government, through its Petro-Canada, has devised and talked on a telephone line in Brantford, Ont., in 1974, two years before the event is claimed to have occurred in Boston. But A. T. Bell patents in planning to publish its fiction on the covers of its 1976 telephone directories.

Plainly, stronger countermeasures are called for.

We suggest that Bell Canada directories commemorate the event of the first crock of beans, yummy with pork and molasses, being served in Brantford, in 1874; of the first loaf of brown bread being baked in Ottawa in 1875; of the first bowl of clam chowder being dispensed in Halifax in 1876. Nor is the old claim of "banned in Boston" enviable; the assertion might be made that our Customs Department in the 1920s and 1930s banned more books — not just for short-fall, but all of Canada — than ever did Boston.

On this issue, we have only begun to fight.

Problems of Diet

Canadians are badly fed.

Not badly fed in the sense that we are undernourished.

It's simply that some of us eat too much, and too much of the wrong things. This, coupled with too little exercise, is what leads to too much poundage and worse, the possibility of a heart attack. Obesity is a common problem too.

In the steak houses it's easy to pick the big eaters; clearly, they are regular customers, and at home the diet exhibits a similar degree of overkill. Others, teenagers for example, exist on horrendous diets such as chips and soft drink.

With them it's not too much, but too little — and of the wrong sort.

Food Prices Review Board chairman Beryl Plumptre had something to say on the subject in Moncton the other day. She says large numbers of Canadians know little about nutrition. Food is merely something to eat.

Mrs. Plumptre believes an average family of four could spend a third less each year on food and still be well fed.

Again, she says: "The chief reason Canadians spend too much on food is that they eat too much of some foods and not enough of others.

Rather than the 40 per cent spent on meat or meat alternatives such as fish by the average family, Mrs. Plumptre thinks 25 per cent would be satisfactry. At the same time Canadians are spending too little on fruits and vegetables, which currently attract less than 20 cents in every dollar.

Then there's the waste. A California reader wrote to Ann Landers recently concerning an elementary school principal who noticed how much food his students threw out, then wrote to the parents telling them of his observations.

It's much the same in Canada. Mrs. Plumptre describes the cumulative effect of indiscriminate food purchases as "staggering." And she points out that taxpayers spent $7 billion every year on health care, of which $1 billion is related to nutrition-related problems.

Federal nutritionists say 60 pounds of sugar annually is an acceptable total for the individual. Compare this with the per capita 100 to 110 pounds consumed every year.

There was a time when Canadians said rude things about the Food Prices Review Board and its chairman. Their image has been improving steadily though, and with information such as this, from which hopefully Canadians will benefit, they are now virtually indispensible.

Vacation Transport

Almost as common as Newfie and Polish jokes are the legends that have grown up around a certain European import that has stacked up a lot of miles since its introduction in the post-war era.

In Kingston some months ago university students managed to manhandle one into the branches of a tree a fair distance off the ground.

Here in Belleville The Intel had a picture of one containing a calf and parked outside a veterinarian's building.

Of course there have been numerous student capers involving the stuffing of as many bodies inside the vehicle as possible.

And now, a new angle, observed on Highway 14 just across the bay the other day. A large motor camper with Maryland plates was cruising along with one of these durable little autos in close-up tow. Often motorbikes are taken along, but these visitors had brought their car.

"We Are Only Up To The Arm Exercises So Far"

Controls Envisaged for 'Mopeds'

Kitchener-Waterloo Record

One thing can be said for the moped (motor-assisted bicycle). It is not, apparently, the curse of the greater racket on the streets and roads of Ontario cities and towns this summer that nuisance is the product of the increasing numbers of motorcycles now with us.

The moped, a low-powered bicycle with a motor, does not make all that much noise and, in the opinion of many, offers a valuable alternative to the gas-eating car or the 10-speed bicycle.

It arrived on the scene with such surprising speed that it caused a certain amount of confusion at Queen's Park, now acknowledged by Transportation Minister John Rhodes. There is now a proposal for tighter controls following a confession earlier this month that legislation introduced in February was inadequate.

The new legislation will require registration of mopeds and the certification by dealers that they will not exceed 30 miles an hour. There will also, probably, be a requirement for operators to be 16 years old where they now, 14-year-olds were allowed to operate mopeds. And, as well, there are recommendations that drivers wear helmets.

The latter is in the category of advice to motorists to wear seat belts, so will hardly be taken seriously. Otherwise, the government is at least moving to acknowledge that the moped is a somewhat different kind of machine requiring its own regulatory legislation.

Time alone will tell if it becomes a regular fixture, and a relatively safe and easy-to-operate alternative for large numbers of motorists. If the oil crunch does not, however, it should exert a growing appeal and become a much more common form of transport.

Boston Poobels Telephone Invention from Canada

Ottawa Journal

At a Holy Cross Alumni dinner in 1876, the following toast was proposed:

And this is good old Boston,
The home of the bean and the cod,
Where the Lowells talk to the Cabots
And the Cabots talk only to God.

If the A.T. and T. claim is taken seriously, perhaps Alexander Graham Bell invented the telephone in Boston to link the Cabots by telephone with a celestial switchboard.

The Canadian embassy, Rightly protesting that Bell devised and talked on a telephone first in Brantford, Ont., in 1874, two years before the event is claimed to have occurred in Boston. But A. T. and T. persists in planning to publish its fiction on the covers of its 1976 telephone directories.

Plainly, stronger countermeasures are called for.

We suggest that Bell Canada directories commemorate the event of the first crock of beans, yummy with pork and molasses, being served in Brantford, in 1874; of the first loaf of brown bread being baked in Ottawa in 1875; of the first bowl of clam chowder being dispensed in Halifax in 1876. Axe Decends on Library

The Globe and Mail

People who use the Toronto Public Library's library on wheels, or go the library on Sunday or during the evening, may soon be out of luck.

City Council has taken the axe to the library budget for the third time in three years, this time to the tune of $100,000. In two previous cuts, Council removed first $465,000 and then $75,000 from the library's operating budget of almost $7-million. The result of the third cut — if it is not withdrawn — will be a cutback in service.

Cutting non-essentials is one thing but Sunday and evening hours are anything but frills, to be lopped off whenever the city fathers need a quick $100,000. A library system which provides only nine-to-five service is cheating many citizens of access to one of the community's most valuable assets.

The public library long ago ceased to be just a place to find light reading. It is a vital part of the continuing education system. Thousands of people in university extension work, high school night courses, apprenticeships, in-plant-training courses or personal instructional programs the library is an irreplaceable asset.

No other part of the city's vast educational system had been subjected to three budget cuts in one year, why should the library?

Country Littering

Owen Sound Sun-Times

Urban littering is bad enough, but when it spreads to rural areas, it is serious.

There is often a tendency to drive into the country and dump things that you don't want left around the house.

And there are rural people who can get just as sloppy with their littering habits as city people.

Trouble is, once you start messing up the countryside, you destroy one of the last hopes to keep pollution under control.

Littering is a lousy habit, whether it be tossing a gum wrapper on a city street, or a pile of old wood on a country road.

Capital Punishment Issue

Editor,
The Intelligencer:

It's about time the MPs in Ottawa snapped to the ambition to reinstate the death sentence in Canada. They have done nothing but talk, postpone and delay any decision on it since 1961. I am all for the prison guards walking off their jobs until the federal government brings back capital punishment. Guards risk their lives for money or benefits these brave men are standing up for a very principle now we have put it off long enough and a plebiscite about every 10 years if we still have second thoughts.

In my opinion, I read on the front page of The Intelligencer the heading "King Billy Rides Here".

I like parade has not been held since 1958. Why do we need one in 1975? Have we with us a second Governor General of Northern Ireland?

If they are ignorant and foolish enough to keep the cloak of a 300-year-old fire burning in that land, must we kindle sparks here?

The gratuitous thuggery practised in the name of sport during the recent Australia vs England Rugby Union match will have shocked and dismayed millions who saw the scenes of unbridled violence on television.

It is welcome news therefore that the English authorities have warned the Australians that they will not be welcome here on their autumn tour unless their over-aggressive approach is eradicated.

But British Rugby should set its own house in order. Let it not be forgotten that it was an international team from these isles which colned the chilling phrase: "Get your retaliation in first" — and implemented that philosophy.

PCs Regaining Strength But Election Should Be Tight

By DON O'HEARN

Queen's Park Bureau

Thomson News Service

TORONTO — The report has now been released on the Toronto Star's special series of election surveys and it confirmed what pretty well everyone has felt.

Its finding is that the Davis government has been building its way back from its obvious low of last winter while the Liberals have been dropping from their actitude high.

Even if one discounts the efficiency of polls, and this is an easy exercise, few will discount these findings. The physical signs that bear them out have been too sensitively present to we observers who take our sounding through our spirits and our muscle at Queen's Park.

The government has obviously been improving while the Liberals have been dropping.

Which, at the same time, doesn't automatically mean that the Davis government will be returned.

First of all, of course, even while the government has been gaining it has still been running second to the Liberals

The gap has narrowed but it is still there and while most observers give the PC's the best chance the fact is that the record doesn't show this.

On the record of the polls they are second.

Then in an election which is running as close as this one is there are any number of possibilities.

For instance if the north should switch solidly for any party it could make a sharp difference.

If the NDP should do well in the cities it could have dramatic influence on the final results, no matter what polls say.

Then there is the matter of candidates.

If the Liberals come up with some good candidates, which they have been desperately trying to do, the impact could be powerful.

At the same time the PC's have two Roman Catholic priests running for them. What will this mean?

In fact the safest speculation seems that it is far made about this election is that it is going to be an interesting one right down to the wire.

Hydro Costs Worry Council

MARMORA — Marmora Village Council has concurred with a resolution passed by the Association of Municipalities of Ontario (AMO) that the municipalities of Ontario register their concern with Ontario Hydro and the provincial government regarding the excessive rates projected for hydro customers in the province.

The resolution also calls for the municipalities to urge the consumers in their jurisdiction to register their concern with Ontario Hydro, the minister of energy and their local MPP.

Ontario Hydro is proposing rate increases amounting to 30 per cent for municipal customers in 1976 followed by further increases of 25 per cent in 1977 and 20 per cent in 1978, for a cumulative increase totalling 95 per cent over the three-year span. The proposed increases are intended to generate $14 billion for Ontario Hydro capital expansion.

The AMO letter stated while such a huge expansion may be necessary, it is incumbent upon Ontario Hydro to thoroughly justify their plans before an Ontario Energy Board hearing. The effect of these costs will be to double hydro rates for municipal customers, thus adding substantially to the inflationary spiral, AMO pointed out.

Coun. Gordon Bennett commented he couldn't understand why Ontario Hydro needed such a large amount for capital expenditure for generally the new users who benefit from such expansion would pay for it.

Council indicated it doubted if endorsing the resolution would do any good but decided to add Marmora's name to the list of objectors.

Heavy Frost Rejected

MARMORA — Marmora and Lake Township will not provide a special garbage collection for the pickup of old refrigerators and stoves.

The request was made by coordinator George Empey who said he had been asked to pick up such items and said he felt he should have extra pay for doing so.

People should look after carting such items to the disposal site themselves, the members of council decreed.

Township road crews have reported a case where human waste had been deposited for collection and urged council to take action immediately to curb such a practice. It was decided that Clerk Mabell Cawley should prepare a by-law defining collectable domestic waste. The by-law will be published and any contravention would be subject to a fine.

Hitch-hikers Find Hastings Friendly Part of Province

MARMORA — Two young men from Cranbrook, B.C. spent a couple of days in the Marmora area recently while enroute to the east coast on a cross-Canada hitch-hiking tour.

Darcy Staples, 20 and Robert Clinton, 21, pitched their tent at Glen-Allan Tourist Resort Thursday and found everyone there so friendly they decided to stay a couple of days before resuming their trek east.

The two lads left Cranbrook on May 18 with $1,000 between them. Food and camping fees have been their major expense. They said they aren't concerned their funds are down to $200 now because they feel they can find work if necessary.

When they reach Quebec the said they hope to find a former school friend, now living near Montreal.

They had no trouble getting rides, they said, and people were wonderful to them. One man took them to his home overnight, gave them breakfast and then drove them back to the highway so they could get another ride.

When asked if they had any unpleasant experiences to relate, they said they spent a sleepless night at a Salvation Army hostel in Thunder Bay with a lot of rough characters.

They carry back packs weighing 45 lbs., containing their tent, sleeping bags, change of clothes and a few utensils. They lost one tent by leaving it on the back of a truck and had to buy another.

Both of them said they were tired of going to school and want to take a couple of years off before returning to take a technical course of some kind. They hope to get a job in Edmonton on their return and save enough money to go to Europe next summer.

Cranbrook is quite a lumbering centre, they said. It has a population of 15,000 and lies in the Kootney valley between the Selkirk Mountains and the Rocky Mountains. They said their families were reluctant for them to make the trip at first but have been encouraged by frequent post cards from the two young men that the trip has gone well. Darcy said he met his grandmother in Petrolia for the first time when they arrived in Ontario.

Hastings Highlights

Oil Sciences Complaint

MARMORA —One of the first jobs the road maintenance men should get busy at after their week's holiday, is spraying for dust control, the Marmora and Lake Township Council has agreed. A letter from Mrs. Clayton Tompkins asking for some type of oil on the road in front of their home was only one of the complaints the members of council have been receiving because of dry weather.

MARMORA — As part of her research on the social, economic and political study of the Marmora area, Ms. Catherine Cameron was a spectator at the recent meeting one afternoon of Marmora and Lake Township Council.

Cottage Protest

ARMORA — The cottage owners at Dickie Lake in Lake Township are protesting Phase three of a development proposal proposed by Charlton Properties Ltd. of Peterborough, a letter from one of the owners, Prof. Pat White, has informed Marmora and Lake Townships Council. The matter is before the Hastings County Planning Committee.

Taxes Collected

MARMORA — Sixty percent of 1975 taxes amounting to $139,904 have been collected as of June 30, Clerk-Treasurer Mabell Cawley reported at the recent Marmora and Lake Township Council meeting.

Payments of $60,960 to the Hastings County Board of Education and $4,437 to the separate school board have been made, Mrs. Cawley said, the payments being half of the levy for 1975.

Wolf Bounty Paid

MARMORA — Payment of the $25 wolf bounty to Jim Cuddy was authorized by Marmora and Lake Townships Council even though Mr. Cuddy neither shot or trapped the animal but found it dead on a road, a victim of a car accident presumably. Council approved the bounty when it was pointed out by Coun. Joe McGrath that council had not specified the bounty was contingent on the wolf being shot or trapped.

Safety Check Removes Faulty Cars from Road

The annual safety check for faulty vehicles is under way in Belleville.

A mobile team from the transportation and communications ministry now is at work at the Quinte Exhibition grounds — scrutinizing vehicles sent by city police.

The check runs through to Friday.

But by Tuesday, police had reported a number of automobiles had been found mechanically unsound.

The sequel to such a discovery: Licence plates are removed on the spot, and the driver's ownership stamped. The vehicle — which has to be towed away — then must be corrected as ordered and a mechanic's certificate of safety issued. That document entitles the driver to have new licence plates issued free at the vehicle licence bureau in the city.

To Tuesday cars being checked were those ordered by police to report for a safety sounding when the ministry team arrived, said a police official.

But police may also order any automobile they deem mechanically faulty off the street for a checkover.

MR. RENE CHAYER

Hal Finkle is pleased to announce the appointment of Mr. Rene Chayer as Service Manager of Finkle's Leisure Land Mr. Chayer is well known to Travel Trailer Owners in the Quinte area as a highly qualified service technician.. Mr Chayer looks forward to serving your needs and asks you to stop in at Finkle's Leisure Land or call 968-8333 for prompt, efficient service.

Marmora Contributes $400 To Legion Park Program

MARMORA — A donation of $400 to the Marmora Recreation Committee towards the expenses of operating the recreation program at Legion Park was authorized by Marmora and Lake Townships Council meeting recently.

The request for a contribution was presented by Coun. Ted Booker at last month's meeting but was held in abeyance because council felt they didn't have enough information on the recreation committee's budget needs.

A notice in the local paper that the swimming lessons would cost township children $10 each and Marmora Village children $6 because the townships' lack of financial support around a number of residents and a petition was circulated.

The petition was presented by Bob Sanderson who urged that council act quickly on the matter. Mr. Sanderson said it was his understanding that 32 per cent of the children in last year's program were from the township.

Nader Says Mounties Snooping

WASHINGTON (CP) — Consumer advocate Ralph Nader wants to know whether the RCMP has been snooping into the mail of United States citizens—and he's asking Prime Minister Trudeau to come up with the answers.

In a letter to the Canadian prime minister, in which he makes a request that Trudeau conduct an inquiry into the possibility, Nader makes reference to the U.S. Freedom of Information Act as "a statute which is commended to your notice for possible emulation in Canada."

Nader made his letter, dated July 9, public late Wednesday.

In it, he refers to "disturbing disclosures about the scope of governmental invasion of the privacy of the mail in the U.S."

"Mail has been intercepted before leaving and on entering the country (the U.S.) to and from certain countries, abroad by the CIA (Central Intelligence Agency), with or without the knowledge of the U.S. postal service," he wrote.

Chemical Treatments

TORONTO (CP) — A United States doctor told the Ontario environmental hearing board Wednesday that many Chicago children are given harsh chemicals to purge lead from their blood.

Shocking Act

TORONTO (CP) — To issue entry to Canada to the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) is a "shocking and disgraceful political act," Stephen Lewis, leader of the Ontario New Democratic Party, said Wednesday. The PLO is an organization avowed to international terrorism and "represents only a fanatical urge to achieve by violence what the world would wish to achieve by negotiation."

Won't Run

TORONTO (CP) — Ontario Premier William Davis said Wednesday that he will not be a candidate for the federal leadership of the Progressive Conservative party when Robert Stanfield steps down. "I'm very involved with government here," Mr. Davis said in an interview.

Gas Sparks Fumers

TORONTO (CP) — Ontario's consumer protection bureau has received 80 calls about the price of gasoline since the provincial government put a temporary freeze on prices last Thursday, bureau registrar Dr. Gordon Wedgeworth said Wednesday. He said most calls were from consumers who wanted to know about the freeze.

Suggests Controls

MONTREAL (CP) — Paul Pare, president of Imasco Ltd., a conglomerate with tobacco and food interests, suggested Wednesday that businesses should institute their own voluntary price and wage guidelines, but added that government controls are totally unacceptable.

Production Down

NEW YORK (AP) — Crude oil production by the Arabian-American Oil Co. (Aramco) the world's biggest petroleum producer, dropped in June following a rise in May, a spokesman said Wednesday.

Accept Contract

QUEBEC (CP) — The 300 office and production employees at the French-language daily Le Soleil have voted to ratify a new contract, under which the production employees would receive a total increase of $105 weekly spread over the next three years, raising salaries to $220 from $215.

Women Eligible

REGINA (CP) — Women of the Mennonite Brethren Church now are eligible to be elected as delegates to conferences and to most church and conference boards and committees, according to a resolution passed Tuesday at the annual Conference of Canadian Mennonite Brethren Churches.

Inquiry Continues

VANCOUVER (CP) — Mr. Justice Parris inquiry into hostage-taking at the British Columbia penitentiary continued Wednesday to sit in camera. Three commissioners headed by Chief Justice John Farris of the B.C. Court of Appeal are investigating the June 9 incident in which three prisoners armed with knives held 15 employees hostage for 41 hours.

Extends Loan

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian international development agency (CIDA) will lend Barbados $2.1 million for the purchase of water supply equipment in Canada, CIDA announced Wednesday.

Paints Portrait

TORONTO (CP) — A portrait of John Robarts, Ontario's 17th premier, was unveiled in the halls of Queen's Park Wednesday.

Three years in the making, the four-by six foot portrait in egg tempera on gesso panel, is a departure from the somewhat somber paintings of his predecessors which hang outside the cabinet office.

Deplores Waste

OTTAWA (CP) — Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc said Wednesday he deplores the waste of fish by Canadian fishing boats whose catches exceed international quotas.

But it is difficult to do anything about it, he said in the Commons.

Abandons Coins

OTTAWA (CP) — The government has abandoned plans to mint a special gold coin for the 1976 Olympics because an authorizing bill cannot be approved in time, Postmaster General Bryce Mackasey said Wednesday.

Broadbent Passes Protest Chance

OTTAWA (CP) — Ed Broadbent promised after winning the New Democratic party leadership to wage an all-out battle against the new 10 cents-a-gallon federal tax on gasoline.

But he passed up a chance Wednesday to stall the matter on technical grounds.

The tax took effect June 23 but legislation giving formal approval must be passed by Parliament.

The bill covering budget tax changes came up for debate in the Commons Wednesday and was immediately challenged by the Progressive Conservatives on technical grounds. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West) said the ways and means motion tabled by Mr. Turner in advance of the bill differs from the contents of the bill.

Speaker James Jerome declined to rule immediately on the objection, opening a chance for opposition parties to interrupt the debate and go on to other business until a ruling is made. But Mr. Jerome asked party leaders to let the debate go ahead.

Mr. Broadbent initially shook his head at the suggestion, but changed his mind when the Conservatives said they were willing.

Mr. Jerome is expected to make his ruling today.

The complaint by Mr. Lambert is raised traditionally by opposition critics as a delaying tactic. Parliamentary rules require the government to table ways and means motions in advance of all tax bills.

Mr. Broadbent, elected NDP leader Monday, said the tax will cost motorists $70 to $80 a year on average

Lawyers Expect Long Hearing

OTTAWA (CP) — Lawyers said Wednesday they were worried they will be buried in a blizzard of paper when hearings open this fall on applications to build a natural gas pipeline to the north.

The hearing is expected to be among the longest and most complicated held by the National Energy Board.

Lawyers for parties involved in the proceedings—a total of 84 counting the two applicants and other interested parties—are to exchange written evidence and documents might lead to a massive accumulation of paper before the hearing ends.

Canadian Arctic Gas Pipeline Ltd. is seeking permission to build a 37-billion line linking Alaskan and Mackenzie Delta gas to markets while Foothills Pipeline Ltd. of Calgary wants to construct a smaller 54-billion pipeline connecting Delta gas only.

"We'll be snowed under in a virtual avalanche of paper," said John Hopwood, counsel for Alberta Gas Trunk Lines Ltd., after he heard the requests for written evidence and comments at a pre-hearing conference.

Canada, Iran Sign Business Pact

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada and Iran signed memorandums of agreement Wednesday covering a record $1.3 billion worth of business and Trade Minister Alastair Gillespie said the figure could go to $2 billion or higher.

Mr. Gillespie said about $1 billion of the $1.3 billion business involved in projects expected to be completed within the next five years, will net a boost to Canadian business.

Some of the projects are joint ventures with Iranians.

He said about a dozen companies are involved as prime contractors. Hundreds and perhaps thousands of other companies would act as suppliers.

Negotiations were in progress with Iranian interests that could add business totalling another $650 million.

Mr. Gillespie said it is because the $1.3 billion is a record figure for business transacted with a country at one time.

The agreements call for supply of Canadian goods and services for metal production and fabrication, mining and forest resources development and social welfare services.

A partial list of prime contractors involved in the agreements included:

Alcan will provide a complete aluminum smelter operation.

P. S. Ross and Partners management consultants of Toronto will provide product and complete cost guard service.

Farsi Teleprinter Terminals of Montreal which has demonstrated a computer typewriter-teleprinter system that for the first time will make possible transmission of the farsee script used in Iran.

Canada Wire and Cable Co. is involved in a joint venture worth $30 million with Iranian interests to produce a wire and cable plant.

The Stadler Hunter interests of Montreal reached agreement on provision of another pulp and paper plant—worth $50 million. The interests are involved in a $300 million pulp and paper project in Iran.

Maloney to Hold Ontario Hearings

TORONTO (CP) — Ombudsman Arthur Maloney says he will conduct hearings across Ontario during his first year in office, asking citizens how he can best fulfil his role.

Mr. Maloney made the comments Wednesday following his presentation to Lt.-Gov. Pauline McGibbon by Premier William Davis.

The Toronto lawyer is expected to be sworn in formally as Ontario's first ombudsman in September.

His staff will be housed in offices to be rented at Queen and Bay streets in downtown Toronto. More than 300 complaints have already piled up at his office.

"I'd like to spend my first year studying the office of ombudsman in other provinces and tour the province meeting interested groups and people at public hearings," he said.

He would visit other countries which have an ombudsman. "Within less than a year I'd like to draw up a blueprint which will be as an office of ombudsman second to none anywhere in the world."

Will he be a white knight expected to rush to the rescue of every disgruntled taxpayer?

"I hope people don't feel the office creates some type of superman."

He said he is pleased with legislation passed by the legislature dealing with his responsibilities, adding "it is workable."

Plutonium Sale Still in Doubt

OTTAWA (CP) — A French denial that plutonium recycling equipment will be sold to South Korea was thrown in doubt Wednesday in the Commons when External Affairs Minister Allan MacEachen indicated that the deal is being negotiated.

Telling the House that South Korea does not plan to process spent fuel from a Canadian reactor there, he said:

"The Korean foreign minister has informed us that the proposed facility (plutonium recycling plant), which I understand is to be secured from France, will be on a research scale and designed to establish technical capability for the reprocessing of spent fuel."

The comments by Mr. MacEachen were at odds with a denial Tuesday in Ottawa by French Minister Michel Poniatowski that France intends to make the sale.

An external affairs spokesman, asked about the new tradition, said all the department had to go on was news reports of the Poniatowski press conference.

Strike Statistics Still Skyrocketing

TORONTO (CP) — The Globe and Mail, says that a bleak labor picture for the remainder of the year, says there are currently 193 active strikes across Canada involving at least 40,000 workers and the numbers might increase as the weeks go by.

The newspaper says that in Ontario there are currently 73 strikes—31 of which started last month and four last year.

This year will set a record for the number of contracts being negotiated and the number of workers affected, The Globe and Mail says. It also says that many of the most critical negotiations are still to come.

The newspaper says the entire pulp and paper industry in British Columbia might be shut down soon by a lockout or strike in a showdown between the industry and the unions. A similar situation, it says, might develop in Ontario and Manitoba next month between the Canadian Paperworkers Union and Abitibi Paper Co. Ltd.

It says the dispute between the Canadian Union of Postal Workers and the post office might easily lead to a strike in the fall.

Unions in the textile industry are bargaining for 30,000 workers, the newspaper adds. Garment unions, both in the men's and women's clothing industry, are also due to renegotiate agreements.

On the national scene, Air Canada and the Air Line Flight Attendants Association are trying to work out an agreement and the CBC and its unions have begun bargaining, the newspaper says.

The International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the federal treasury board face another round of negotiations, The Globe and Mail says, adding that bargaining will start in the fall between the air traffic controllers and the treasury board.

Tough bargaining, the newspaper says, also lies ahead for the Canadian Union of Public Employees and the Service Employees International Union and hospitals in Ontario.

Housing Movement Active

OTTAWA (CP) — The co-operative housing movement is busier than the federal government expected this year—a bright spot in a generally depressing housing scene.

Continuing co-operatives, a fairly new phenomenon in Canada, still capture only a small portion of the housing market but they are consuming federal funds at a quickly that Canada Mortgage and Housing Corp. (CMHC) officials say the current budget will not be enough.

These officials note the government may decide to bolster this year's $35-million co-operatives budget with some of the extra $200 million promised CMHC by Finance Minister John Turner in his June 23 budget.

Lorne Nicolson, British Columbia housing minister, strongly criticized the federal budget for co-ops in April, saying British Columbia alone could pick up all the federal money.

Company Offers $25 a Share

HAMILTON, Ont. (CP) — A Hamilton investment firm has offered more than $25 a share for control of the Canadian-based, but British-controlled, Eddy Match Co. Ltd.

Central Ontario Fund Ltd., a private investment holding company, proposes to buy all of the 290,953 issued and outstanding common shares of Eddy for $25 a share in cash, plus half of a share-purchase Class A share of Central Ontario Fund for each common share of Eddy.

The offer is subject to obtaining at least 90 per cent in total of the common shares of Eddy. Central Ontario Fund already holds 10,000 Eddy shares.

As part of the offer, Central Fund and Canada Ltd., an allied company of Central Ontario, would purchase all of the Class A shares of Central Ontario Fund at $5 a share on surrender of 90 per cent of the Eddy shares.

It was the second offer for Eddy Match in the last month. Warrington Products Ltd. of Toronto offered to purchase all Eddy shares at $25 a share last month. President Robert Curl of Warrington and the company is proceeding with the offer and will mail the proposal to Eddy shareholders later this month.

Tariffs Raise Consumer Prices

OTTAWA (CP) — Consumers are being forced to subsidize manufacturers, based mainly in Quebec and southern Ontario, through protective tariffs raising prices for imports and domestic goods, an Economic Council of Canada study says.

The report, urging movement toward free trade, today calls tariffs a type of tax that effectively transfer income from other parts of the country to Ontario and Quebec, where most manufacturing activity takes place.

"About 45 per cent of manufacturing activity in Canada is still protected by nominal (tariff) rates in excess of 10 per cent.

"Of those protected jobs, 49 per cent are found in Ontario, 27 per cent in Quebec, and 24 per cent in all other provinces," the report says.

This "hidden transfer" of money and jobs has long irritated the Atlantic and western provinces, which feel they have been made to pay continuously for the industrialization of central Canada, the council notes.

The report says the Atlantic and western provinces could expect substantial gains from removing tariffs because products of their primary industries would be more in demand. And because of easier access to neighbouring markets, particularly the United States, there would be some expansion of secondary manufacturing, it predicts.

Ontario would benefit both as a consumer and a resource producer, but a good deal of industrial reorganization would be necessary, the report says. More manufacturing specialization likely would occur in Ontario, particularly if trade barriers with the United States were removed.

Quebec's primary products sector would benefit from greater demand and a strong resource base offers the chance for more processing.

But such Quebec-based industries as textiles, shoes and other labor-intensive manufacturing probably would suffer from competing with low-wage developing countries making these same items. However the report says this competition already is increasing, even without free trade.

Air Canada Letters Can't Explain Losses

MONTREAL (CP) — C. [illegible] of Air Canada internal correspondence made public Wednesday revealed the airline had difficulties explaining losses sustained by its affiliate, Ventures.

A memorandum from company secretary M. E. Fournier, released to reporters at an inquiry into the airline's financial affairs, said a Friday 18 meeting of company officials was held to determine whether Air Canada should defend Ventures's losses or disguise them.

The correspondence was released one after Air Canada counsel Gordon Henderson had the airline hid a $1.134 million loss by Ventures, an insurance-booking charter firm.

The memo said "services" billed to Air Canada under the accounting procedures would not be "worth a fraction" of the reported 600,000 annual charge by Ventures and a "service agreement" covering these charges would be "nothing but a device to prevent Ventures from showing a loss."

Mr. Henderson said the airline's financial records had "been audited by a responsible firm according to generally-accepted procedures."

Stephen Lepsin, an accountant commissioned by the inquiry to study the airline's financial statements, testified Wednesday that the Ventures figures had been "presented fairly" in the Air Canada statement.

Intervener Claims Bell Intimidating Commission

OTTAWA (CP) — Bell Canada is trying to win a rate increase case by intimidating the Canadian transport commission with threats of massive layoffs and reductions in construction programs if its current application is not approved, a private intervener said Wednesday.

Carlyle Gilmour, a Quebec lawyer and frequent intervener in Bell rate increase hearings, said the company "is using these threats to intimidate the commission."

"I know they have certainly intimidated me as an intervener," he said.

The commission is hearing the first stage of a two-stage Bell application which would give the company an emergency rate increase of $28 million over the next five months.

Company president A. Jean deGrandpre told the commission Wednesday that Bell would have to lay off several thousand employees between July 1, 1975 and the end of 1976 if the emergency increase was not granted.

Unpredictable Killer, Sudden Infant Death

Conversation with a mother whose three-month-old son had died is bound to be a painful, difficult occasion.

But how much more heart-breaking, how much harder to find the right thing to say, when the cause of the baby's death is SIDS — Sudden Infant Death Syndrome.

This still-mysterious killer of babies in their first year of life comes silently, without warning, while they sleep. It leaves lighted infants who have apparently died peacefully with no struggle or alarm, almost as if they "had simply forgotten to breathe".

And it leaves behind parents stunned by horror and disbelief that their children have been taken so quickly from them. Even worse is the universal reaction of guilt that follows acceptance of the death.

"You can't help feeling guilty," said the young mother I talked to recently. "You keep wondering what you might have done, or not done, and if somehow the death is your fault, even though the doctor and the coroner tell you it's not.

"And it doesn't help to encounter people who seem to turn away from you, as if you were somehow to blame."

That feeling of being at fault haunts parents until they fully realize the nature of SIDS — also called Crib Death, Cot Death, or SUID, Sudden Unexplained Death. Eventually, they come to know what researchers have discovered: So far, there is no known cause, and therefore no possible prediction or prevention.

What is known are a multitude of factors: It seems to occur more frequently in the winter, although it occurs all through the year. It happens to both sexes, but male infants, and those with a lower birth weight, are at a slightly greater risk. Often, but not always, there may have been a recent viral infection or mild cold.

SIDS is the cause of death for approximately two out of every 1,000 liveborn babies, most usually around the second or third month.

Sudden death of infants is not a new syndrome, it has been recorded for centuries. Neither does it happen in only one place — it's known around the world — although there is a higher instance of SIDS in poor socio-economic environments.

The disease attracts many theories that have yet to be substantiated. Speculation has included enlarged thymus gland, absent parathyroid glands, allergy to cow's milk, sudden infection, whiplash injury of the spinal cord — but these have all been disproven.

Obviously, more research needs to be done. In our area, the Queen's University Department of Community Health and Epidemiology is conducting a study of the facts surrounding these baffling deaths. The Canadian Foundation for the Study of Infant Deaths (4 Lawton Blvd., Toronto), solicits funds in order to collect further data, and to distribute what facts are already known.

"I thought it could never happen to us," said the grieving mother, "and I felt so confident that all my children had escaped. I thought my luck was odd enough that we were past the danger point. He was such a healthy baby.

"Now it's so hard, explaining his death to the other children. "I say he's gone to live with Jesus, but how do I explain what happened?

"We intend to contribute to research in every way that we can. That's all we can do now. That and tell people about what SIDS is."

Al Gardiner and Jim McCulloch lay sod at the Cheshire Home.

Cheshire Landscaping Garden Club Project

Garden Club members and friends took another step in the completion of their current project Wednesday night when they laid 325 square yards of sod at the Cheshire Home.

In the second year of their landscaping project, at the John Street home for handicapped young adults, the Garden Club already added part of the front lawn last year after removing three 10-cubic-yard truckloads of rubble with the help of the Parks Board.

Hedges were planted and a rock garden established. This year, the Garden Club has not only laid the sod but built a patio with materials donated by Stanley Structures.

The Garden Club has also rented a city garden plot where members are tending vegetables to be donated to the residents.

Chairman of the project is Jim McCulloch. Laying sod Wednesday with Mr. McCulloch was Al Gardiner, Joan McCulloch, Cheshire home night superintendent, Alan Doering, Daina and Stuart Honeyman, Harold Thompson, Mike Leroux, Mike Foote, Alma Gassenbeck, Jonathan Gassenbeck, Larry Johnson and resident Tommy Kells.

Study Guild Chooses Executive

The annual meeting of the Women's Study Guild was held at the home of Lois Wabash when many members gathered in her garden for a potluck supper.

Following the meal, a short business meeting was held when reports of the year's activities were heard. A letter from Marylene Cohen of Marseilles, France, the girl adopted through CANSAVE was read, and the slate of officers for the coming year was presented. Elected to office were Jill Coe, president; Georgina Mackle, vice-president; Susan Sherry, secretary, and Linda Wilson, treasurer.

Highlight of this, Marjorie Tooth told of her recent trip to Prague, Czechoslovakia. Introducing the topic, she told of the size and the geographical features of the country, and of its location in the heartland of Europe. Then she gave a capsule account of the history of Czechoslovakia from the second half of the ninth century to the present time.

Mrs. Tooth told of the many different groups of people who have joined to form this federation of ten regions. She spoke of great leaders such as Wenceslas, Charles IV, head of the Holy Roman Empire who made this city his capital, the rise to power of John Huss, the great religious leader, and of Masaryk and Dubcek.

In conclusion she showed slides, pictures and brochures and related some of her experiences which demonstrated how Prague has preserved many things from the past, yet is moving into the future with such modern construction as a subway.

Engagement

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Adams wish to announce the engagement of their oldest daughter Tricia to Wally Dalnard, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Dalnard. The marriage will take place July 25, at 7 p.m. at College Hill United Church.

Kline—Murphy

St. Joseph's Church was the setting for the June 7 wedding of Mary-Jo-Anne Murphy daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Murphy, and Robert Thomas Kline, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Kline.

Rev. J.A. Carley performed the ceremony.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of sheer over sharkskin with a mandarin neckline, Alencon lace trimmed the front and back bodice, and made a flounce around the hemline.The full length twelve-tier veil fell from a headpiece also trimmed with lace and of flowers and seed pearls, and the bouquet was red roses, lily of the valley and fern.

Susan Thibedeau was maid of honor in a peach knit dress with an empire waist, tie-back belt and lace trimmed collar and puffed sleeves. She wore a white lace-trimmed hat and carried a white lace fan with peach-colored carnations, lily of the valley and fern.

Sharon Fox, the bride's sister, was matron of honor and Debbie Donaldson, the groom's cousin, was bridesmaid. They were identical gowns and carried identical bouquets to the maid of honor.

The bride's niece, Tammy Fox, was flower girl in a white and peach flowered dress, similar in the design to the bridesmaids. She carried a white basket of peach-colored carnations, and wore matching flowers in her hair.

John Murphy, the bride's brother, was ring-bearer,"and Gary Craig was best man. The bride's brother Pat Murphy, and the groom's cousin Ken Donaldson, were ushers.

A reception was held at the Four Seasons Hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. Kline now live on Charles Street.

NICHOLAS J. POPPENK, son of William and Joan Poppenk of Owen Sound, graduated June 12 from the University of Toronto Law School with an LLB. Nicholas attended Clinton High School in Clinton.

Abortions

KINGSTON, Jamaica (AP) — Abortion will be lawful on the grounds of rape, carnal abuse and incest when amendments to the existing law governing abortions are made. Under the existing law, abortion is illegal and carries a life imprisonment penalty.

People and Events

The last regular meeting of the Madoc and District Senior Citizens Club for the summer months was held on Wednesday.

A reading on hospitality was given by the President, Jennie Broadworth.

A schedule has been made out for guides at O'Hara Mills on Sunday afternoons through July and August.

On July 16 the club will take The Stoney Lake Boat Cruise from Young's Point through The Kawarthas. The bus is leaving the United Church at 8 a.m.

After the business was dealt with, bingo, crocknole and cards were enjoyed.

RETIREMENT TEA

A retirement tea to honor Gladys Sine of Stirling was held at the home of Carrol Clements, Rivervalley Road, recently.

Mrs. Sine taught for 23 years, the last seven in the Stirling schools, where she has taught in the Special Education Classes and done remedial work.

Eighty-two friends and teacher associates were greeted at the door and asked to sign the guest book by Olive Whitehead and Grace Marton.

The guests visited and were served a punch by Mrs. Sine's granddaughter Kim Cooney and Amy Latendorf.

The hostess invited the guests to the tea room where the tea table was centred by an orange, yellow and white floral arrangement and orange candles in silver candle holders. The tea services at either end were presided over by Gwen Fargey, Alice Heasman, Isabel Good, and Dorothy Blakely. The guests were served by Fay Dunham, Frances Prest, Ana Watson, and Ruth Heath.

Alpha Delta Kappa Sorority, of which Mrs. Sine is a member, attended as a group and the president, Pearl McCurdy presended her with a cup and saucer flower arrangement.

During the afternoon Grace Norton recited a poem which she composed about the special education teacher.

A framed copy of the poem printed in old English was presented to Mrs. Sine.

LET'S BAKE BREAD

The old art of baking bread has become a new trend in this area. Many young people are realizing that they don't want to lose the many skills, arts and crafts of yesteryear and so bread making has been revived.

"Let's Bake Bread" is the topic of the newest 4-H Homemaking project for young people between the ages of 12 and 26 years. A minimum of four members is required to have a 4-H club. Each club requires a minimum of one adult club leader, but two leaders would be best. With training schools held at the end of the summer clubs meet during the fall and projects are usually complete by the end of November.

For Prince Edward County the leaders training school has been scheduled for August 25-26, in Picton from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. both days.

If you are interested in reviving your skills in bread-making or actually learning how to bake bread and if you would like to volunteer your time to teach a small informal group of young people from your area, contact the County Home Economist, Jacquelyn Hart, 41 Dundas St. W., Napanee 354-3371. No Specific Qualifications are necessary. Applications are available at the County Agricultural Office. Please phone for more information. The deadline for applications is August 1st.

Young people in Prince Edward County interested in joining a 4-H Homemaking club may contact the Picton or Napanee Agricultural Office for more information.

Legal secretaries are being recognized as more than shorthand typists, coffee and polite phone answerers, and credit for the change must go largely to two Vancouver women, Kathrine Moore and Gail Parry.

In the past four years they have written personnel manuals and reference books for legal secretaries as well as giving seminars and night school courses to update secretaries on the latest happenings.

It all started when both women, were working in the same law firm.

"I needed something to guide me in doing a special job," said Mrs. Moore. "I was in litigation and Gail was in conveyancing and we couldn't help each other. We thought there must be a book for legal secretaries. We looked around but could find none.

"One day, when I was particularly begged, I said to Gail, 'Let's write a book.'"

Working at night and on Sundays, they put together a manuscript containing nearly 200 typed documents, detailing the intricacies of a legal secretary's job. "The Legal Secretary's Guide Book" became a must not only in law offices but in government offices and schools.

"A proficient secretary works for her boss," said Mrs. Parry. "It saves time. I've prepared divorce papers, and at the same time, the lawyer has seen four clients."

Last year the two women published another book B.C. Companion Act-Practice and Procedure, and they are working on the Ontario edition of the reference book.

"The laws are different there from B.C.'s and it will probably take two years to complete," said Mrs. Moore.

Mrs. Parry and Mrs. Moore are also involved in providing continuing education for legal secretaries. They sponsor night school classes for secretaries at their training centre and have a correspondence service for legal secretaries and non-professional legal office staff members.

"We plan to do more writing and upgrading of legal secretarial services and procedural material for law offices," said Mrs. Moore. "We fill such a niche in the whole general court and legal system."

Legal Secretaries' Guide

They Wrote the Book

VANCOUVER (CP) — Legal secretaries are being recognized as more than shorthand typists, coffee pourers and polite phone answerers, and credit for the change must go largely to two Vancouver women, Kathrine Moore and Gail Parry.

In the past four years they have written personnel manuals and reference books for legal secretaries as well as giving seminars and night school courses to update secretaries on the latest happenings.

Escapes Arranged Marriage Girl Elopes in Rebellion

BOMBAY (CP) — Fatma Rahiman, a 19-year-old Moslem girl from India's southern state of Kerala, recently eloped with a young businessman to Kuwait in the Persian Gulf.

Fatma's two brothers flew to Bombay to try to seize their sister and take her back home. But she and her lover slipped away in time.

Fatma's parents wanted her to marry a 55-year-old landlord who already had one wife. Moslem law permits a man to have four wives at a time. But the girl said she strongly believes in monogamy.

In a note to her mother, Fatma wrote: "I do not accept the old-fashioned notion of marriage and can never be the wife of a man who has another wife."

This and other similar events showed the growing rebellion among India's Moslem women against orthodox customs and beliefs appear to have caught the imagination of women attending the recent All-India Moslem Education Conference in Calicut.

Though the conference was primarily called to discuss the educational needs of Moslems, who number more than 60 million in India, women delegates resisted the occasion to berate Moslem men for "suppressing" women and "preventing them from in the name of the Koran."

Several delegates said Moslem priests were not even permitting women to learn to read and write.

Begum Abdullah, wife of Sheikh Abdullah, the popular Kashmiri Moslem leader, asked Moslem men to encourage their wives and daughters to go to school and college and take up jobs if they wanted to.

Sharda Tyabji, a social worker and feminist of Ahmednagar in Maharashtra state, recently called upon Moslem women in India to "rise against the tyrannical religious laws governing marriage and divorce."

The Indian parliament has enacted laws banning polygamy and facilitating divorce, only among Hindus. Government officials have been repeatedly said they do not wish to "interfere" in the affairs of the Moslem minority.

Apparently, the ruling Congress Party does not want to risk valuable votes by earning the hostility of the powerful orthodox elements among Moslems.

But Moslem women are increasingly clamoring for reforming their religious laws.

Fatma Ghafoor, president of the women's wing of the All-India Moslem Education Society, said: "Priests and feudal elements are determined to misinterpret the teachings of Prophet Mohammed to deny the rights of women to men.

"Moslem women will not any longer tolerate their suppression by misguided men."

Canadian Mini-skools Expand in U.S.

WINNIPEG (CP) — After years of competition over the dominance of American test books in Canadian schools, a Winnipeg-based company is beginning to educate children in the United States — with the bottom up.

Mini-Skools Ltd., a preschool child-care company founded in 1969, now has a total of 66 centres in the U.S. stretching from Atlanta, Ga., to San Diego, Calif. In contrast, the Canadian content of the company consists entirely of two schools in Winnipeg and eight in Toronto.

Marketing manager Roger Williams estimates 75 to 80 per cent of the company's child-handling capacity of about 5,200 is full.

Part of the reason behind the company's rapid expansion in the United States while the Canadian market remains relatively untapped is based on simple economics.

Mr. Williams said in an interview that building or acquiring established day care centres is much more economical in the United States than in Canada.

"One of our main problems is that we can't get land where we would like to build at decent prices. We need at least an acre of land if we're going to build. And of course, the market in the United States is much larger."

A school was recently built in Atlanta at a cost of about $250,000, significantly less than the estimated cost of a centre of a similar scope and size in a city like Toronto, Mr. Williams said.

"And quite frankly, there's not many schools we would want to acquire in Canada."

Based on a liberalized style of care for children between two and five years and under six years, the schools offer programs ranging from toilet training to kindergarten.

In addition, some schools offer supplementary services such as overnight and weekend activities and after-school care for children in Grades 1 through 6.

Company literature stresses developing a child's self-identity, fostering an understanding of his own emotions, fingering responsibility and creating an understanding of and a relationship with both adults and other children.

Mr. Williams says a large measure of the company's success is linked to the growing number of families with both parents and the subsequent need for child-care homes. And although a child may be enrolled in the school for a full day five times a week, the company realizes it cannot act as substitute for parents.

"We don't think of ourselves as a replacement for the family, but as an extension of the family unit.

"The cost of the service, averaging about $30 a child for a full five-day week, is a big factor. And the fact that parents are paying directly for the service forces the company to maintain a high standard.

"We have to satisfy the parent all the time. If we don't, they may remove their child from the school. It's not like a public school system where you have no choice. When they want to see that their children are benefitting."

Fashion Show Merry Go-round Wearies Magazine Editors, Buyers

NEW YORK (AP)—Stuffy jobbers and late-arriving Palm Beach dowagers. Vogue, Harper's Bazaar and Women's Wear Daily reporters are among those that rank the preliminary posts.

Those who are tucked away behind five rows of folding chairs hate to think what might happen in case of fire.

A mini-fashion show is presented by the crowd. What does a fashion writer wear when covering someone like Dorothy de Lima Hertz or Bill Blass? The editor of Harper's Bazaar is always in a grey or black turban. The editor of Vogue is unobtrusive in black slacks and jacket.

The outof-town fashion editors are always the most elegantly attired in last year's designer purchases.

The music during the hour-long show is critical to the pace and presentation of the outfits. It is usually too loud and repetitive. If fashion writers never hear an endless, bouncy song called The Hustle ever again, they surely will cheer.

But again, something soft and soothing like the Muzak at Dorothy Brooks and Tchaikovsky at Hairdos has lulled at least one disinterested matron to sleep in her airless corner.

The audience is usually cold and discriminating in its appplause which is sparingly doled out for some innovative ways with hips and tucks or skirt lines.

But once were good-natured hoots and claps for one model whose right breast was bared suddenly when the shoulder of her plunged-necked chiffon gown slipped.

In a similar, visceral critique, one hard-bitten critic commented woefully when watched the Concept VII show in the lobby of his unfinished building, and thought the audience would applaud everything because "all the models are so beautiful."

Overthrowing Her Brother Is Juanita Castro's Desire

MIAMI (AP) — Her eyes flash and there is passion and fire in her voice when she denounces her brother and all he has wrought.

"He is a monster that must be overthrown," says Juanita Castro of Fidel. "That is the only way we can eradicate communism from Cuba."

Juanita has been in Miami exile since 1964, two years after her brother toppled the Batista dictatorship and came to power.

She helped her brother in the struggle, but turned against him in 1960 and left Cuba.

She went to Washington this spring for a anti-Castro demonstration held because U.S. officials had announced that a consensus exists for lifting the economic embargo against Cuba.

Miss Castro laments the fact that interest in her cause has dimmed.

"The small, dedicated circle of firm anti Communists is now considered moderate," she says ruefully.

What kind of a woman is Juanita?

She's on her early 40s now, a hard-working businesswoman.

She recently became co-owner of a small pharmacy and discount notions store in the outskirts of Miami's "Little Havana" section.

She dresses fashionably; works a full day at her store; drives a late-model car and lives with a Cuban friend in an upper-middle class home.

She has never married and says little of her personal life.

Her father, Angel Castro, a Spaniard, was a well-to-do landowner in Cuba's Oriente province. He died in 1956 while Fidel was in Mexico preparing for his Cuban invasion. His wife died in 1963.

of Juanita's Havana home, Juanita left soon for Mexico, blaming Fidel for hastening her mother's death. Fidel never speaks publicly about Juanita.

Juanita has not tempered her harsh judgment of Fidel, who she says "betrayed us all, those of us who believed in a social, humanistic, democratic revolution."

Declining a post in Fidel's first government in 1959, Juanita says she worked instead at establishing hospitals and schools for the poor in the interior of the country.

But it took her only a little more than a year to become disillusioned.

Environmental Influence Makes Boys Better at Math

(CP) — Tests undertaken at the University of Rhodesia show that adolescent boys are better at mathematics and science than girls of the same age.

The research was conducted by Dr. Elizabeth Hendrikz, director of the department of education and the country's first woman dean.

Dr. Hendrikz was investigating the factors which influence competence in mathematics and science and everything possible was done to reduce the influence of formal schooling.

The research subjects were secondary school boys and girls, both African and European. The groups included day pupils and boarders from Grades 9 and 11.

They demonstrated a consistent sex difference in the tests. European boys scored top marks. European girls were next highest, followed by African boys and then African girls.

So far interesting facts emerged from the research. The best girls were at least as good at the best boys, but most of the girls were at the end.

Only a quarter of the Europeans girls had continued with physics and chemistry after Grade 10. The rest had given it up because they were "not good at it."

Results that tend to be dependent, especially on their mothers, tend to be psychologically well-developed, but poor at mathematics.

Girls brought up to be independent and solve their own problems tend to be better at maths and science than others. Also girls who identify with their fathers rather than their mothers and who are tomboys rejecting authority, are more likely to be scientifically and mathematically competent than others.

Dr. Hendrikz says a satisfactory test will be developed

Dutchman Says Joie de Vivre Sadly Lacking in New Zealand

AUCKLAND, N.Z. (CP) — The world has come to expect diplomats always to be supermaniacally tactful. So when the retiring Netherlands ambassador to New Zealand, H. C. Jorissen, had some frank things to say about life in New Zealand, he predictably raised a storm.

In an address at the end of five years in New Zealand, Jorissen said there was no specific reply to the question: Are you and he leaving?

Then he said: "But among the reactions I could give would be that I am, even after five years, still as amazed as in the first week by the number of drunks, by poverty, by foul language, by slovenliness, the barrenness of houses, the lack of wit, charm and joie de vivre.

"I have often, too often, felt gravely depicted by the monotony of existence. I could never get used to the inane preoccupation with sport, which strangely enough includes the activities of the punters (bettors). I can never quite understand the need for so much recreation, not being preceded by creation.

"I will not accept the judgment that a man is old and ripe for retirement when he can no longer play Rugby, beat through the bush, or when his golf handicap has reached 30.

"Nor do I accept the dictum of a certain Rotarian who admitted having come to the end of the road when he had reached the age of 70.

"But then again I have felt very much at home with a number of friends. I have admired parts of the landscape. I have at times—mostly away from Wellington—liked the climate. I have enjoyed the company of, and shared the enthusiasm of, some collectors and connoisseurs.

"I have admired some painters, enjoyed the work of a few poets and writers, both old and young. I have been captured by Beaglehole (a leading historian and editor of Captain James Cook's voyages). I have felt deeply the great traditions of the Maori people, their art, legends, and lore, and their search to regain their past glories, their cohesion and their lands."

Jorissen said he had enjoyed the frankness of politicians and civil servants.

"To these I wish to add the two essential elements of the New Zealander, of the old and of the future: the Maoris and the farmers.

"To me, the farmers of New Zealand are the true New Zealanders, as true as the Maoris who came before them. Close to the land, with a true conception of their place in society; hard-working, helpful, imaginative, hospitable.

"The memories of being with them will remain with me, retaining their freshness and perhaps, in the end, will make me forget all else."

But the encomiums in the latter part of the quotation have been completely submerged in the comments on the initial criticisms.

Some Dutch settlers, of whom there are many in New Zealand, have upheld Jorissen's comments. Many have criticized them as making life much more difficult for Dutch immigrants seeking to adjust to life in New Zealand.

These critics claim that the ambassador's remarks will heighten prejudices against Dutch as arrogant and hypercritical. Several have said they will write to Queen Juliana protesting against the remarks.

Some New Zealanders have endorsed every criticism made by Jorissen and said the country would be better off if the remarks were heeded. Many have strongly condemned the comments.

New Zealanders who have visited Holland have scathingly commented on life and customs there, with emphasis on drug culture, red-light districts and smugness.

Other diplomats have been somewhat aghast. The Polish charge d'affaires, J. Bobczewicz, said: "I am shocked that a diplomat would say such rude words. It is not good."

"Of course, New Zealanders like sport. I think it is a good healthy thing. And drinking is done everywhere.

"There is a lack of cultural life here, probably because you are so far away from Europe. But I meet polished humanists and good scientists?"

The Singapore high commissioner, Chan Keng-Howe, said: "The statement lists virtues that may outweigh some non-virtues. The average New Zealander is a decent bloke."

Immigrant's Book Surrealistic Ramble

By JANET FINE
The Canadian Press

Senses assaulted in a surrealistic vision, the novel Canadian Healing Oil, by Juan Butler, certainly does not make comfortable reading.

Pages (wri) in his words, sentences and images. Photographs and drawings twist in and out with the story, if there is one, until the novel becomes one with its existential purpose.

The author writes on Canada from his experience. He was born in London, the son of an English father and a Spanish mother. He came to Canada with his family in 1948 and grew up in Toronto.

After travelling in Europe, he settled again in Toronto where he now lives. His first and second novel, The Gardagroan, deal with the theme of his feelings towards his Canadian identity.

But author Butler does not let the reader off easily. One is pulled into his world of French and Spanish phrases, historical proclamations, stories of relevant and irrelevant musings.

The story of Gerard de Nerval and the literary scene in Paris in the 1830s is interestingly interwoven. But when these fascinating slips of stories are told, they are usually disrupted by other characters popping in and out of the book.

There are Ionesco and absurdist characters who resemble figures from Alice in Wonderland, constantly interrupting each other and the stories being told.

The main character Butler, St. John or the observer-participant floats in and out of situations. His amusing French stories of Montreal are strategically placed in alternating chillness of the Canadian identity.

The meaning becomes clearer as the protagonist journeys to the Virgin Islands. There he is given the Canadian healing oil, a "universal liniment" and is overjoyed by its implications and power.

Singing a French song, the Canadian oil has miraculously enough healing powers. Religion becomes a stronger factor in his reactions. On the final page, a large reprint of the 1925 drawing, The Blessed Canadian Martyrs, is shown.

The book is written in the style of a cinemagram, so-phisticated artist. Everything is jumbled enough to be clever and often poignant.

In this surrealistic rambling, it often is hard to enjoy the book or even to read the manuscript. It is not so much healing as it is startling as the author takes us on a lightless tunnel trip through his mind and fantasies, to reach at some message on the state of religion, Canada and the mind.

Different Summer Job

Student Tom Bamsey keeps a close eye on the ground as owner Peter Owens (right) takes hot-air balloon up for trial run. Bamsey, a University of Guelph student, had planned to spend the summer landscaping. But an ad in a local newspaper was the first step on his way to spending his summer as a student balloonist. (CP Photo)

Student's Summer Job Flying Hot-air Balloon

GUELPH, Ont. (CP) — A university course in fisheries and wildlife is a very down-to-earth occupation for most students.

But not for 22-year-old Tom Bamsey.

The University of Guelph student is spending his summer learning to work off the ground instead of on it—not quite the course he had planned.

Originally, Tom lined up the same job he had held for the last five years, working for a landscaper. Then he saw a newspaper article concerning the Canada Manpower Centre for Students (CMCS) here.

The article in Guelph Mercury mentioned that the centre had a job vacancy for a person to learn to pilot a hot-air balloon.

"We were swamped," said Don Kentlinke, a student assistant at the Guelph CMCS. The Centre received more than 200 applications for the job and Don referred about 20 people.

Peter Owens, who owns the balloons, says he settled on Tom easily.

"It's important that you be responsible and able to make fast decisions on your own. You're flying thousands of dollars worth of equipment and you have to decide what to quickly if you're coming up on power lines, so you don't wa... up the balloon and get yourself electrocuted."

Having the summer job flying the balloon is something special for Tom. "I've always wanted to fly a balloon since I was a kid," he said, "it's something I dreamed about."

Flying a balloon isn't all dreams though.

It starts at 4:30 a.m., before the sun's up and has a chance to heat the air and create winds.

Before any flying is done the balloon has to be prepared. That means you take it out of its canvas bag where it's folded like a tent. Then you unroll it and stretch it along the ground, stretched out, it runs over 100 feet.

Then the—basket—attached and Peter starts filling the balloon with cold air from a fan. When it has taken on some shape, he starts the burners and the balloon begins to fill.

When ready, it is 50,000 cubic feet of hot air, 60 feet high and 40 feet in diameter, with a three-by-four basket of reinforced plastic underneath.

He opens the flames up full and the propane burner roars as the balloon slowly lifts off the ground.

At first Tom had trouble keeping the balloon at a level altitude—it kept moving up and down when the flame was too high or too low. And then, just as he had it levelled, the flame went out.

He scrambled through his pockets for matches as the balloon slowly settled and Peter laughed through laughs. "You're gonna crash, you're gonna crash." Tom fixed the burner, but not in time and the balloon touched down gently then bumped back into the air.

But the sun was starting to heat the air and the winds were picking up. The lesson was over for the day.

Peter, who owns four balloons and makes his own, said there are only 10 people in Canada with balloon licences and only nine balloons.

A balloon pilot is licenced by the department of transport. Tom will have to log 16 hours in the air before he can write the department's test.

If things work out, Tom will get a raise in pay and a job flying the balloon for a year if he wants.

Whatever happens, he has one of the oddest jobs placed through CMCS yet this year. There are 113 centres across Ontario and in years past the centres have placed everything from chicken catchers to clowns, but no balloonists.

Richthofens Prepare To Defend Red Baron

BONN (Reuter) — More than half a century after their illustrious forbear's last sortie in his Fokker triplane, the surviving members of the Richthofen family are scoring a new kind of battle.

This time the most likely arena is a West German law court, not the skies over France where Manfred von Richthofen, the Red Baron, fought and died during the First World War.

In the family's view, the good name of Richthofen is at stake. Led by Hartmann Baron von Richthofen, the flyer's nephew, they are out to see it preserved.

The Richthofens' adversaries are fellow Germans, admirers of the debonair fighter ace, who gat together in Frankfurt two years ago to form "the Red Baron Flying Club."

Since then the 50 or so club members have given an occasional flying display in appropriately painted biplanes, and minted commemorative medals bearing the Red Baron's profile.

Last April 21, the 57th anniversary of the Baron's last flight, they organized a solemn pilgrimage to his grave outside Amiens in northern F:ance and set up a memorial at a nearby airfield.

Baron von Richthofen, born in 1888, became a legendary figure in the First World War, a hero in his own country and a fearsome name to his enemies. He shot down 79 British plans and one Belgian beio e 25-year-old Capt. Roy Brown, a native of Carlton Place, Ont., led a patrol of six Sopwerth Scouts into a 20-aircraft formation commanded by the German air ace.

The young Canadian, who had been awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for two years of aerial combat before the encounter, was credited with ending the Red Baron's spectacular career. He died near Stouffville, Ont., in 1945 at the age of 50.

The Richthofen family views the efforts of the newly-organized club on the Baron's behalf with something less than wholehearted enthusiasm.

Hartmann Baron von Richthofen, a 35-year-old casino director, made plain to club president Peter Steinberger that the family was against this club using the Richthofen name. Among other things, it was apparently a question of good taste.

He also argued that the Richthofen tradition was adequately preserved by a squadron of the West German Luftwaffe, which was named after the baron in 1961.

Its commanding officer agreed. He told the club he and his men disapproved of its plan to have the anniversary of the Baron's death proclaimed German Aviation Day.

For his part, Steinberger was unimpressed by the squadron's claim to the right of keeping the Richthofen legend alive. "They do next in nothing," he said.

An attempt to settle the dispute out of court between lawyers for the club and family failed after reports appeared in the West German press. A court case, Steinberger now says, seems likely.

If it does go to court, reference may be made to a legal precedent involving another of German aviation's big names, Baron Zeppelin, the airship builder.

He successfully took a businessman to court 65 years ago for misusing his name—to promote a line of tobacco and snuff.

The German's club's efforts seem modest by comparison with the Richthofen cult in the United States, where the Baron is pitted against Snoopy, the cartoon strip dog, and appears as a trade name for steak houses and long drinks.

Enthusiasts here take a more reverent view, gathering every so often to read from Richthofen's war diaries.

In them, the fighter ace, who habitually posed for photographers holding a walking cane or with one hand in the pocket of his riding breeches, at times seems very much the product of a bellicose era.

In 1917 he wrote: "When I have shot down one Englishman, my passion for the hunt is stilled for the next quarter of an hour. I just can't bring myself to shoot two Englishmen one after another."

Emergency Declared

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Because of a seven-month drought, Haiti's minister of foreign affairs has declared a national food emergency and asked the United States and other governments for help. The minister said the hardest hit portion of the country is the northwest peninsula, where more than 200,000 persons live.

Major Changes in Store for Ambulance Services Says Province

By COLIN BRUCE
Staff Reporter

Some "significant changes" will have to be made to the operations of two ambulance companies serving Belleville, a provincial government spokesman said Wednesday.

Charles Brubacher, director of ambulance services for the ministry of health, said during an interview, a lengthy study of the two companies has been completed and an earlier provincial statement that Belleville is a "high-cost area" was proven out by the study.

"There will have to be significant changes made," he said. "I don't know about amalgamation," — a prospect considered by provincial study teams as a cost-cutting measure.

But Meeks of LaSalle Ambulance and Len Steele of City Ambulance will be called to a meeting with ministry officials July 15 to discuss the study findings.

A study of Belleville's ambulance services was prompted last January with a statement from Mr. Brubacher that action must be taken to "integrate" the companies and lower the cost of the service. According to 1974 budget figures, Belleville ambulance service cost the province approximately $200,000.

The July 15 meeting will be the first chance either owner has had to view the report — a document that its authors say will be made public "eventually".

In an earlier report by this paper it was stated that one major study recommendation will be to centralize all ambulance dispatching — relieving the need for officers in Trenton, Madoc, Napanee and Picton. The central dispatch station will be maintained in Belleville.

Gerry Bahe, author of the study, said during an interview "amalgamation is implicated in the report as a cost-cutting measure but we're not going to force them (operators) to do anything".

Both companies have submitted their proposed operating budgets for 1975 but neither will receive approval until the study recommendations have been considered, he said.

Commenting on the budgets, Mr. Bahe said: "I think we can trim a few dollars from them if the recommendations are accepted." Exact budget projections for 1975 were not available.

He said his recommendations will include cutbacks in the number of staff on duty and consequently the number employed by each firm.

YMCA Plans Expansion

The YMCA can begin exploring new ways to serve the community now that their capital debt is retired says Dr. Douglas Horne, president of the local organization.

The original plans conceived by Ed Zeigler, the architect of the building, included the addition of a gymnasium.

The centre will utilize the entire 5½-acre Victoria Avenue site.

"We' desperately need a gymnasium," said Dr. Horne speaking in an interview. Wednesday. "Which will probably include squash and handball courts and a beach club."

The outside land would be landscaped for use as a track with the remainder of the area used for tennis, basketball and volleyball courts.

"The people have shown by the response to the campaign that they believe the YMCA is a viable institution," he said.

"The YMCA is alive and now we can start using the fees of the members to offer new programs."

Water Level Plunges

Water dropped suddenly at the public swimming area in the city's riverside park overnight Wednesday.

But the levels are expected to return just as quickly, says Clifford Belch, recreation director.

Reason for the sudden drop was further north along the river where Corby Distilleries Ltd. had to carry out maintenance repairs at the company's dam at Corbyville Tuesday.

Removal of logs released a sudden flow of water which in turn dropped levels at the log control dam which creates the swimming pond at both riverside parks on Cannifton Road.

By Wednesday morning the water level at the beaches had dropped more than two feet.

Lifeguards remained on patrol and the area was still being used by swimmers, although participation had dropped off because of the low water, Mr. Belch believed.

Boats Entered

City police said investigating a series of breakins of four boats docked at Morch's Marina at 25 West Dundas St. early today.

A police spokesman said nothing is believed stolen but intruders wrought some damage before they were scared off by a passerby at about 3 a.m.

The spokesman said a fire extinguisher from one of the boats was used to spray foam on three others. It was left discarded on a dock.

Windows and cabin doors were discovered insecure, window screens ripped and in one case, eight-track tapes were strewn about, he said.

'What's Going on Back There?'

This St. Bernard appears to have quizzical look — or maybe it's just dogged acceptance of necessity — 1 gets anti-rabies shot from federal veterinarian Dr. Rick Johnson at Melrose Wednesday. It was one in a series of clinics being held through Hastings County to vaccinate household pets after reports of rabid foxes in county's northern townships earlier this year.

Rabies Threat Promps Campaign to Protect Pets

Pets are being needed by the score daily in Hastings County.

In a mass drive to protect pets against rabies, federal veterinarian clinics are being held throughout the county to vaccinate household pets.

The first such project in three years, it was originally prompted by complaints of rabid foxes in the county's northern Township's earlier this year.

Incidents of rabies were reported in the northern areas of Hastings and Lennox and Addington counties where the carriers are believed to spread from neighboring Renfrew County.

After investigation the federal agriculture department's health of animals division in Belleville organized a series of inoculation clinics throughout Hastings. Immunwill end in Belleville in mid-July.

Alarm Box

Wednesday, July 9, 2:18 p.m.
— brush and grass fire at rear of residence at 118 Herchimer Ave., no damage, cause unknown, required only 25 minutes to extinguish.

A mobile team from the division — headed by veterinarian Dr. Rick Johnson — has been moving south through the county's communities holding two clinics a day.

Working in township halls, arenas and garages, they've been immunizing an average of 125 dogs or cats a day, estimates technician George McNeely.

By Tuesday night, more than 2,200 pets had been vaccinated against rabies.

Biggest response has been mainly in northern communities. In Maynooth, there were 260 vaccinations, 211 at Bancroft. Even small hamlets in the hinterland of Hastings saw owners with their domestic animals — 84 in Port Stewart, 72 in Marlbank.

Other statistics include: Marmora, 225; Tweed 151; Madoc 145; Ivanhoe, 122; Stirling, 175.

Weather in the rural areas may have affected attendance. Farmers now are busy with such chores as hay noted the technician.

But "it's a fair response."

The mass safety measure may pay dividends in winter months when the wild carriers of the disease range further afield, he noted.

The clinics now are moving into their last week.

By Friday, Shannonville and Canifton were scheduled.

Monday morning the clinics move to the Tyendinaga Mohawk Reserve and to Old Trenton curling club in the afternoon.

The final round of immunizations will come during two days in Belleville.

Schedule for the city clinics: July 15, East Dundas St. firehall, 9 p.m. — 12 noon and 1 p.m. — 5pm. July 16 West Moira St. firehall, 1 p.m. — 5 p.m., 6 p.m. — 8.30 p.m.

Teachers Plan Joint Seminars

Hastings' 1,100 elementary and secondary school teachers will make local history next October when they meet together for the first time during a professional development day.

Acting director of education L. J. Reid said Wednesday one professional day will be held jointly between the elementary and secondary teachers on Oct. 24.

He said plans now are being made to bring in a keynote speaker for the morning session.

Mr. Reid said the professional development day would probably take place at a Belleville secondary school. He said the morning key note speaker will be followed by workshops in the afternoon.

The Hastings County Board of Education through the family-of-schools system supports closer co-operation between elementary and secondary school teacher.

There are eight families in the county. A family consists of a secondary school and its nearby elementary schools, usually referred to as feeder schools.

Ignorance of the Act

Lack of knowledge of the Landlord and Tenant Act has been a big contributing factor in the increase of landlord-tenant problems in the Bay of Quinte area this year, says the Quinte Information and Assistance Centre. Vera Heimbach (left), chairman of the centre board of directors and Bert Gerling of the centre staff peruse sections of the act they say many landlords and tenants do not even know exist.

Thurlow Township Ordered To Improve Dump or Close It

By JERRY BROWN
Staff Reprter

If Thurlow Township does not operate its waste disposal site according to provincial specifications the ministry of environment will hak all burning.

The warning, in a letter from a senior environmental officer and read to council at its monthly meeting, outlines the poor conditions and operating procedures being followed when a government officer visited the site July 7.

He said flames from the uncontrolled fire were jumping 15 feet into the air and the density of black and white smoke was almost 70 per cent.

There also was no attempt to segregate different types of garbage as is required by law, the letter said.

Council drafted immediate procedures to deal with the problem.

The fire department was ordered is to extinguish the flames; garbage separation will be enforced by a town law officer and smoking past a certain point will be prohibited to limit the chance of accidental fire.

Council is also in the process of purchasing a used bulldozer for the waste disposal site for proper compacting of the garbage.

The law officer will also check all people using the site to ensure they live in Thurlow Township as council explained there is a problem with outsiders dumping garbage.

In other business council forwarded a letter to the Hastings County Board of Education, saying it would like to purchase the old Foxboro Public School for use as a community centre.

Land Purchase Okayed

MARMORA — An offer of $15,500 for 1.2 acres was accepted at a general meeting of the Canadian Legion Branch 227 membership Wednesday, paving the way for construction of a 30-unit senior citizens housing project in this village.

Gordon Bennett, first vice-president, said the membership voted unanimously to accept Ontario Housing Corporation's offer.

Plans call for construction of 26 one-bedroom units in a two-storey building on the site.

Rare Coins On Block

Coins from a number of countries dating back to the early 1300s will be on the auction block at Brooks Auction behind Westgate Plaza July 27.

Mr. Brooks said Wednesday the collection of more than 500 coins represents the largest and oldest collection he has ever handled.

He said all the coins would not be sold during the auction and however, approximately 75 will be held for bidding with the remainder to be auctioned at later sales. In addition to this collection, he said a similar number of United States coins will also be sold at the July 27 sale.

"The biggest problem I'm faced with is determining the value of the coins," said Phil Brooks, proprtior of the auction business. "There isn't anyone in the city who can tell me the worth of some of the older coins."

Mr. Brooks said he intends taking the bulk of the coins to Toronto for appraisal before the sale.

Mr. Brooks said the identity of their collection owner is being kept confidential.

Mr. Brooks said quite often coin collectors with large consignments for sale do not want their names made public so as to guard against theft from their homes.

He said he expects professional collectors from as far out as Toronto and Ottawa to attend the sale together with "the hundreds of local collectors."

The sale begins at 1 p.m.

McLauchlan Critical Of Provincial Budget

This week's provincial minibudget gives nickels while the Ontario pirks taxpayers' dollars, says Carson McLauchlan, New Democratic Party candidate for Hastings-Frontenac.

Mr. McLauchlan levelled in the criticism in statement to day on Monday's mini-budget introduced by Ontario Treasurer Darcy McKeough.

He said people should enjoy as many as the benefits of the government's budget.

"After the election you're no longer important to the Tory government — as proved by the fact that most of these programs expire after the election."

A provincial election is expected sometime this fall.

Mr. McLauchlan said the budget produced much-needed revenue for housing — but that's something the NDP has been "saying all along."

The money is there but the government's priorities were wrong.

Moira River at Lowest Level in Three Years

These days Jeff Hunter spends his time looking for small bait fish trapped in the road pools of the Moira River at Cannifton.

There are plenty of mud pools right now.

Still the 14-year-old youth would sooner do what he and others do during summer holidays — swim around Cannifton dam.

The reason for the mudpools and the lack of swimming is the level of the Moira has been shrinking — following the long, dry spell of recent weeks.

A Moira River Conservation Authority (MRCA) spokesman says it's at its lowest level in at least three years.

Lack of rain and evaporation caused by sweltering temperatures are chief reasons for the shrivelled flow along the waterway.

The solution is plenty of rain, says the MRCA official, an opinion corroborated when he contacted a hydrometrologist the natural resources ministry's conservation authorities branch.

The expert said the low-water problem is compounded by the fact there is little run-off into main streams from surrounding watersheds.

"Heavy rain is needed to have any effect on the river," said the official.

Meantimes, an eye is also being kept on supply sources — Lingham and Deer Rock lakes in the northern area of the Quinte district which supply the waterway.

But both lakes also present problems in such weather, monitors of the MRCA's water control advisory committee noted this week.

One trouble with the storage areas, the committee told a resident complaining about present river levels, is that they shallow water bodies. Hence, evaporation was also a high at source.

The MRCA has one solution — construction of a big reservoir in the Bend Bay area of Marmora Township. So far, the project has not received any senior government approval.

House Up For Bids

STIRLING — A new house with much community effort built into it will be offered for sale by sealed bid July 15 here.

The house, on Highway 33 on the southern limits of this village was a project conceived to raise funds for the new district arena centre here.

Many local suppliers assisted the project by providing material at special prices.

But a major feature of the project was the volunteer labor of area citizens — both men and women — both starting and finishing the building.

In total, it's estimated about 80 people donated 418 hours of labor to the project.

Water Needed

Jeff Hunter seeks fish bait around Cannilton dam, where once, he says; he'd have been swimming. Prolonged dry spell has affected water levels throughout Moira River watershed, say conservation authorities.

Lucas Sentence Raised

TORONTO — Larry Peter Lucas, 25, of Centre St. in Belleville had his sentence imposed for conviction on a charge of assault causing bodily harm with intent to wound in February increased to six months in jail from a 30-day intermittent sentence.

The increase resulted from a successful Crown appeal heard Wednesday before the Ontario Court of Appeals here.

He was one of five brothers charged in connection with an incident in Belleville's Hillcrest area last summer which involved a street fight in which a city policeman was struck by a wrench.

Landlord-Tenant Problems on Rise Says Centre

By ROBIN CHASE
Staff Reporter

Landlord-tenant disputes are on the increase this year and the trend is to point the finger at landlords as the major culprits in most cases, says the Quinte Information and Assistance Centre here.

Bert Gerling, a centre staff member, said in a recent interview, "we are finding more and more that the real villain is the landlord."

However, he added, it does not mean there are no tenants at fault but pointed out there are more cases this year than ever before which put the blame on landlords.

Mr. Gerling said the centre investigated 50 cases during June or 13 per cent of wer-all investigations. During June last year, landlord - tenant problems represented only per cent of the centre's amount and in June, 1973, the figure was 11 per cent of the entire picture.

Reviewing this year's June cases, Mr. Gerling commented, "it was rather obvious that the tenants never knew what the Landlord and Tenant Act was all about."

Bill Hockley, another centre staff member, added, "neither of them know their respective responsibilities and liabilities."

He said many tenants are quickly scared into submission when confronted by their landlords. Their landlords are a frightened group of people," he remarked. "They are easily intimidated by landlords."

Mr. Hockley notes, when assisting a tenant in negotiations with fight landlords, they are usually told to vacate their apartments.

He said many problem landlords are of the absentee version who purchase entire apartment blocks — doctors, lawyers or respectiel businessmen — "pillars of the church."

"Things are getting so bad that there's got to be rent control and landlord-tenant tribunals," Mr. Hockley said.

He said many tenants are rents, and coupled with the inability to find other accommodation, are increasingly receiving eviction notices from landlords for non-payment.

"Something is going to have to happen because all these people just cannot be ordered to leave their premises, just because they can't afford to pay the rent with no alternative to go to," he said.

Rents Often Major Factor

came in an interview after a presentation of a profile of the centre's June case-load.

Mr. Hockley told centre directors landlord-tenant problems last month have increased over May.

In an interview, he elaborated, saying a large problem in such conflicts is the "rapid escalation" of rents.

Tom Seaver Struggles Through

Met Pitcher's Problems Are Trouble for Braves

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Baseballs slipped out of Tom Seaver's hand, his shoulder hurt and he couldn't get his curve ball over. He had all kinds of problems pitching to Atlanta Braves.

And the Braves had all kinds of problems hitting him.

Even when he's troubled, the New York Mets' finest pitcher is hard to beat and he proved it Wednesday night with a classy 2-1 decision over Atlanta in 10 innings.

"He's been pitching great all year," said Rusty Staub, who hit the game-winning homer in the 10th. "If we'd had gotten him a few runs if some other games, he'd have even more victories than he has."

About the slipped baseballs: "At one time, home plate umpire Shag Crawford came out and asked me if the balls were too slick for me."

In the other National League games, St. Louis Cardinals blanked San Francisco Giants 4-0, Houston Astros nipped Montreal Expos 4-3 in 10 innings, Cincinnati Reds whipped Philadelphia Phillies, 9-7, Pittsburgh Pirates trimmed Los Angeles Dodgers 3-2 and San Diego Padres tripped Chicago Cubs 5-2.

Staub's game-winning blast, his ninth of the season, came after Max Leon, 1-1, had gotten the Tomer to hit into a double play. Seaver, 13-4, scattered nine hits to become the National League's second 13-game winner, joining Don Sutton of Los Angeles Dodgers.

Willie Davis and Ron Fairly pounded home runs and Ted Sizemore collected four hits, leading St. Louis and John Denny over San Francisco. Backed by a 15-hit attack, Denny coasted to his fourth victory with an eight-hitter.

Cesar Cedeno's run-scoring single in the 4th gave Houston its triumph over Montreal. Trailing 3-0 after 1½ innings, Houston finally caught up when Doug Rader hit his first home run of the season with one out in the ninth inning off starter Dennis Blair.

Johnny Bench drilled a game-tying home run and Pete Rose collected singlehome the go-ahead run as Cincinnati scored five times in the eighth to beat Philadelphia. Bench walloped his 18th homer leading off to pull the Reds into a 5-5 tie.

Expo Strategy Backfires; Cesar Delivers for Astros

CESAR CEDENO

HOUSTON (AP) — Montreal pitcher Don DeMola gambled Wednesday with a time bomb—Houston Astros centerfielder Cesar Cedeno—and it blew up in his face in the 10th inning.

At the time, it seemed like a good bet. Cedeno, hitting well below his lifetime average, had gone hitless in four previous at-bats but in the 10th inning he lifted a single to right field to break a 3-3 tie and give the Astros their fourth straight victory, 4-2.

With first base open, Cedeno thought DeMola might intentionally walk him.

"My first thought was that they might walk me to set up the double play," Cedeno said. "But they decided to pitch to me and I could not blame them. Really. I mean it. I had been up four times previously in the game and I didn't do anything.

"Twice I had runners in scoring position, but they got me out. But they have to either pitch to me or Bull (Bob Watson). I'm glad they pitched to me. It was a pretty good move for us. I liked the way it turned out."

Astros manager Preston Gomez liked the way pitcher Ken Forsch turned out. He liked him so much, in fact, Forsch has earned a spot in the starting rotation.

"Ken Forsch will go into the starting rotation," Gomez said. "He's earned it. Ken is just getting the feel of starting after being in the bullpen for four years. He changed speeds well and he's getting better every start."

Forsch pitched a strong eight innings, although he didn't get the victory, yielding all three of the Expos' runs.

Montreal scored the game's first run on Mike Jorgensen's single in the final inning and went ahead 3-0 in the second on Pepe Mangual's two-run double.

The Astros started rallying in the second with one run on Roger Metzger's sacrifice fly.

The Astros got another run in the third on Cedeno's grounder and third baseman Don Rader blasted his sixth homer of the season into the rightfield seats in the ninth inning to force the game into extra innings.

Jim Wynn Cracks All-star Lineup

NEW YORK (AP) — A final-week surge of votes has lifted Jim Wynn of Los Angeles Dodgers into the National League's starting lineup for baseball's 1974 all-star game, it was announced Wednesday.

Wynn overtook Del Unser of New York Mets, who was leading for the third starting berth in the outfield. Final vote totals showed four Cincinnati Reds and three Dodgers among the NL's eight starters.

Wynn joins Pete Rose of Cincinnati and Lou Brock of St. Louis Cardinals in the NL outfield for next Tuesday's game in Milwaukee.

Rose has been playing third base but was listed on the ballot as an outfielder. Brock, who set an all-time record with 118 stolen bases last season, had 1,247,460 votes.

Two other Los Angeles regulars are in the starting lineup. Steve Garvey, most valuable player in last year's 7-2 NL victory, will start at first base and team-mate Ron Cey will be at third.

Cincinnati's Joe Morgan at second base and Dave Concepcion at shortstop complete the infield.

Cincinnati's Johnny Bench, leading NL vote-getter with 2,200,147 ballots, will be the starting catcher.

Brock and Concepcion are the only chances from last year's NL starters. Brock replaced all-time home run king Hank Aaron, traded to the American League Milwaukee Brewers during the winter, and Concepcion beat out Bowa, last year's starter, for shortstop.

Manager Walt Alston of the Dodgers named a nine-man pitchers staff earlier this week—Andy Messersmith, Don Sutton and Mike Marshall from his team, Tom Seaver and Jon Matlack of the New Mets, Tug McGraw of Philadelphia, Phil Niekro of Atlanta, Randy Jones of San Diego and Gene Reuss of Pittsburgh. He will complete his 28-man roster with reserves to be announced Friday.

The American League starters, for next Tuesday night's game in Milwaukee, will be announced today.

Poles Are Hot

TORONTO (CP) — The Polish national soccer team gave a repeat performance Wednesday of its lopsided 8-1 Sunday victory over the Canadian nationals in Montreal when it defeated the Canadian side at all Varsity Stadium before 14,321 fans.

From the outset, the vastly-superior Polish side controlled play and mounted a 4-1 lead at the half. It coasted with substitutes through the final 45 minutes of pre-Olympic play.

Poland, third-place finishers behind West Germany and the Netherlands in last year's World Cup in Munich, got two goals from Andrzej Szarmach and singles from Jozef Kwiatkowski and international star Kazimierz Deryna.

Canada's goal was by Chris Bennett of Vancouver.

Angels Shade Orioles 3-2

Brooks Is Hot and Cold

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

It was poetic justice.

First, Brooks Robinson took advantage of a third-strike wild pitch that would have ended the eighth inning, and delivered a two run single to put Baltimore Orioles in front of California Angels 3-1 in an American League baseball game Wednesday night.

But in the bottom of the eighth, the brilliant Robinson, winner of 15 consecutive Gold Glove awards as the American League's premier fielding third baseman, made a wild throw—only his second error all season—and the Angels promptly rebounded for a 3-2 victory on Dave Collins' two-run pinch triple.

Elsewhere, Boston Red Sox wiped out a six-run deficit and edged Minnesota Twins 9-8, Texas Rangers blanked New York Yankees 4-0, Milwaukee Brewers downed Kansas City Royals 6-4, Oakland A's beat Cleveland Indians 3-1 and Detroit Tigers won their eighth in a row, beating Chicago White Sox 6-2.

The Red Sox increased their lead in the East Division to two games over New York and Milwaukee and six other Baltimore while Oakland has a seven-game bulge over Kansas City in the AL West.

BROOKS ROBINSON

Robinson's error to start the Angels' eighth was followed by a sacrifice. Doyle Alexander replaced Ross Grimsley with a 2-0 count on Boston Lieras and completed the walk to pinch hitter Joe Lahoud. Collins was then called upon to pinch hit for the first time in his 3½ year pro career and delivered his big triple.

Jim Rice's two-out double in the bottom of the ninth inning scored Doug Griffin with the winning run as Boston beat Minnesota. Boston had tied the game earlier in the ninth on Cecil Cooper's pinch homer.

Don Money hammered two solo home runs and Bobby Darwin hit one for the Brewers in their win over the Royals. Money led off the game with his fourth homer of the season and hit No. 5 in the fifth. Darwin's 10th homer triggered a four-run uprising against Nelson Briles in the second.

Ferguson Jenkins pitched a four-hitter for his first shutout of the season and Jim Sundberg belted a three-run homer as Texas beat New York. Tom Grieve doubled home the Rangers' first run in the opening inning and Sundberg cracked his sixth home run in the sixth.

Dick Bosman, Paul Lindblad and Rollie Fingers combined to pitch a five-hitter for Oakland in its win over Cleveland. Bosman, who started the season with the Indians, gave up two hits, both in the fourth. Cleveland didn't score until the ninth.

Bill Freehan hit a three-run homer and Jack Pierce drove in Detroit's other three runs with a single and a grounder. Ray Bare scattered eight hits in relieving Brian Downing's two-run homer, the first runs off Tiger pitching in 31 innings.

Although they're still in last place, Chicago manager Chuck Tanner said the Tigers "will beat anybody right now. They're playing the best ball in the league. If anybody told me we'd only get three runs in the three-game series I wouldn't have believed it."

Newmarket Takes Macs In Extra-inning Match

By TOM Gavey
Sports Staff

Fans got what they paid for on Wednesday night when they saw, the Belleville McDonalds play the powerhouse Newmarket Rays.

Mixed into the game were fine defensive plays, strong pitching and some well placed hits. Unfortunately, the Macs still came out losers as New market outscored Belleville 5-1, in Ontario Football League action.

Newmarket scored in the top of the eighth when Les Downing (last year's batting champ) brought Derek Kinnersley in on a double.

The Macs came right back in the bottom of that inning, scoring when Carl Boomhower got on base and moved home on Dan Lahey's misplaying of Terry Meagher's well hit single. The run tied the game up and gave Meagher his ninth RBI of the year.

It all fell apart in the ninth though, when pitcher Bill Lonney reached base on a Belleville error, got to third, brought in along with Kinnersley (who had walked) when Dan Lahey smacked a triple to left field.

Two more runs were the Macs' downfall, as they couldn't come back in the bottom of the ninth. Wayne McTaggart singled with one out but he couldn't be advanced any further.

Bob Zubler took the mound duties for Belleville and did a good job on the Newmarket bats, giving up only six hits and striking out seven batters. Only one Ray run was earned.

Bill Lonney struck out 10 Belleville batters to take the win for the Rays.

At the plate Terry Meagher and Wayne McTaggart each had two singles, while Glenn Carleton and Larry Mavety both reached base on safeties once.

Downing had a pair of triples to lead Newmarket offence.

Paul Goodfellow made one of the defensive gems of the game when he grabbed what looked like a sure single for the third out in the fourth inning.

Jose Pinga of Newmarket made a number of outstanding plays at short including leaping up for a ball which should have gone for a single. Who hit it? Paul Goodfellow.

The next McDonald home game isn't until July 23, when they meet the Toronto Waxman Globals at Alemite Park for a single game.

In other OFL action on Wednesday night the Woodstock Warriors came within two games of regaining first place in the East Division, by defeating Oshawa 9-1 in the first game of a double-header, and 9-0 by default when IPSU Solomon was injured and Oshawa could not field a full team.

In Kitchener the Evergreens defeated the Toronto Waxman Globals 6-1.

Legion's Steve Carr

Twin Victories

Chalk up a pair of wins for Belleville Legion 99 in Eastern Ontario Baseball Association bantam action.

Playing at home Monday day, Branch 99 shaded Peterborough 5-4 after taking Kingston Lions by a 9-4 count, in Kingston, Tuesday.

Lefty Barry Bazzard went the distance to get the Wednesday win, limiting Peterborough to six hits while fanning six and walking three. Gord Lewis was the loser. He recorded 12 strikeouts but 13 Belleville hits proved his undoing.

Dafoe each cracked three singles and Barry Dafoe had a double and single for Legion. Steve McDroy banged two singles.

Joe Lustic had two Peterborough hits, both singles.

Tuesday, Steve Curr got the Legion win, with relief help from Radford. They combined talents for 11 strikeouts while walking two and surrendering 10 base hits.

Ian Stalker went the distance in defeat. He allowed eight hits while fanning eight and walking five.

Bruce Bell's four singles led the Belleville offensive. Radford supplied a pair of singles.

Don Cyr was Kingston's big man with two doubles and a single.

In other Wednesday EOBA bantam action, Kevin Patrick carried State Farm of Trenton past Kingston, in Trenton, 7-4.

Patrick not only went all the way to get the pitcher win, he powered a pair of homers for the home side. Brian Hanson also smashed a second home run for Trenton.

At the peewee level, Belleville Broadloom struck for three runs in the top of the fifth inning on the way to a 6-2 win in Port Hope.

Glenn McQuail worked the first five innings for Broadloom, pivinr up both Port Hope runs off three hits and four walks. He fanned five. Tony Parks finished up, firing two innings of hitless ball while striking out one to nail down the win.

The bulk of the losers' pitching was handled by Bernie Bemma who toiled six innings, allowing seven hits while striking out five and walking four. Randy Sutton worked the last frame.

McQuaid doubled and singled for the winners. Parks contributed a pair of singles while Brian Cronkright, John Dent, Stu Emerson, Dave Mortenson and Charlie Doran each singled once.

Shawn Wakely had the losers' big hit, a double.

In a Tuesday bike match at Oshawa, Belleville Elliott Motors came up with a 14-9 Robbie Reroy was the winning pitcher and took time out to help his cause by hammering a home run. Jim Cook and Bill Harvey each tripled and singled and Robert Boomhower connected for a double and two singles.

Victory.

Lockhart's One-hitter Puts Posties on Track

After a series of losses, the Post Office got back on the winning track Wednesday night in Belleville Industrial Softball League action.

They took a 3-1 victory from the Independents, with Norm Lockhart turning in excellent one-hitter.

In other league action, The Intelligencer dropped a decision to CNRA 6-3, and UIC defeated Canadian Tire 8-1.

In the Post Office victory Lockhart gave up two walks and blew 11 third strikes by independent batters.

Greg Belle threw the loss, giving up seven hits and two walks while striking out six.

Ron Marriott and Lockhart doubled and singled while Steve Conkrite came up with a triple. George Foote doubled for the losers.

CNRA's win over The Intelligencer put them into fourth place in the West.

Brian Plumbe hurled the CNRA win, giving up nine hits and no walks while striking out four.

Joey Edwards and Davey Feeney combined for the losers, giving up seven hits and seven walks while striking out nine.

Junior Day powered a round tripper for CNRA. While Plumbe, Warren Hay and Clive Williams doubled.

Fred Stalck, Kevin Loudwa and Glynn Reynolds hit two singles each for The Intelligencer.

Joe Scanlon and Rick Sullivan combined again, to take UIC to an 8-1 victory over Canadian Tire.

The two gave up five hits and four walks while striking out two batters.

Andy Prudden took the loss, giving up 10 hits and one walk.

Ron Embery pounded a homer for UIC while Joe Clark and Bob Robb singled twice.

Prudden singled twice for the losers.

Olympics Big Winners But Lose Coach Montes

Service commitments nearly always have an upsetting effect on Canadian Forces Base teams involved in sports.

That point was brought home in no uncertain terms, Wednesday at Canadian Forces Base Trenton when the service team, forced to go with only nine players for the Bay of Quinte Soccer Association match, was crushed 15-0 by Belleville Olympics.

While Olympics were rumping to the unsolicited victory, any unrestrained joy some players may have felt in the harvest of goals was curtailed shortly after the mismatch when it was learned Manuel Montes has been forced to surrender the coaching reins.

Montes, his coaching stint interrupted by shift work, will be temporarily replaced by John O'Neill. A new coach will be named following a July 17 meeting of club officials.

In another BQSA Wednesday match, Belleville Parsons, getting goals from George Tsui and Dave Langlie, fell to Citizens Finance of Trenton 6-2.

Chris Johnson was a three-goal shooter for Olympics, O'Neill, Funder and Gary Donavan each clicked for a pair with singles for Bob Watson, Chris Langlie, Gary Roberts, Montes, Bruce Mohr and Kevin Kirby.

Quinte Raceway

Special Features Set

It'll be a big night for race enthusiasts on Friday at the Quinte Exhibition Raceway as two special races will be held.

In the sixth race the Jean Mowerls Memorial Pace will be run, with only "maidens" (horses who have never won a race) or under $300 lifetime winners running in the race.

The race will be well worthwhile for those who are running. With the purse of $300 goes a cooler (blanket) and a memorial trophy.

"The horses have never won before, but that doesn't mean anything. It'll still be a good race, some nine horses are competing" stated one track official.

The feature race in the ninth will be the Manchester H. Rollins Invitational, with a purse of $600. Some of the better horses in the area will be running.

Galant Mite, driven by Guy LaRush is a fine example of the quality race it will be. Also entered is Charity Chick, driven by Pat Hunt and Bob Ron Robby, driven by Brian Bellamy, to name three.

The race should be a close one.

On July 18 the Ontario Sires Stakes return to Belleville, this time for the two year old colts, and, as usual, this will be a racing highlight.

Exhibition Games Decided Late

Ottawa, Calgary Learn How to Win

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Ottawa Rough Riders and Calgary Stampeders used late-game heroics Wednesday night to post their first victories of the Canadian Football League exhibition schedule.

At Ottawa, split end Rhome Nixon's diving touchdown catch with 23 seconds left to play gave the Rough Riders a 20-16 Roughriders.

Rookie Gerald Kunyk booted a single wit hone second left in the game to give Calgary Stampeders a 19-18 come-from-behind win over Winnipeg Blue Bomber.

Ottawa's win was its first in three games, having lost previous pre-season encounters 21-20 to Edmonton Eskimos and 41-31 to British Columbia Lions.

The Stampeders win evened their record at 1-1 after losing their first game of the season by a 19-18 score to Montreal Alouettes.

Nixon hauled in the 21-yard pass from rookie quarterback Condredge Holloway for the touchdown set up by a 49-yard pass-and-run by halfback Jim Fley before 17,022 fans.

Saskatchewan had pulled into a 16-13 lead just 20 seconds earlier when wide receiver Mantuck caught a Randy Matchingly pass in the corner of the Ottawa end zone. Ottawa trailed 9-7 going into the final quarter but Gerry Organ kicked field goals of 30 and 11 yards to move Ottawa ahead.

George Reed scored for Saskatchewan on a five-yard plunge in the second quarter and Bruce Berg converted one Saskatchewan touchdown and added an eight-yard field goal in the first quarter.

The crowd of 17,563 at Winnipeg watched Kunyk's single sail into the end zone, followed by a swarm of Calgary tackler . Defender Walt McKee had little chance to return the kick or run it out.

Calgary place-kicker Cyril McFall missed three field goal attempts, but his 49-yarder with two minutes left barely made it through the uprights to tie the game 18-18 and set the stage for Kunyk's game-winning single.

Winnipeg went ahead early in the fourth quarter when Ralph Brock, who replaced Winnipeg starting quarterback Chuck Ealey at the beginning of the final quarter, fired a 19-yard touchdown pass to Tom Scott.

Calgary got 18 first downs to Winnipeg's 20 but the Stampeders had a total offence of 313 yards, compared with 285 by the Bombers.

In the only game tonight, Toronto Argonauts play host to the Lions.

The Argonauts announced Wednesday the release of Billy Corbett, a 275-pound offensive tackle who chose the CFL although he was the No. 1 draft choice of Cleveland Browns in 1974.

Corbett, a six-foot-four graduate of Johnson C. Smith College in Charlotte, N.C., was accompanied by considerable publicity when he spurned the National Football League and came to Toronto.

Russ Jackson, the Argos' coach, explained that Corbett's inability to switch from tackle to offensive guard, where he plan to use two Americans this season, was the reason for his release.

Course 'Sleeping Giant'

Peter Tames Carnoustie

CARNOUSTIE, Scotland (AP) — Carnoustie's 7,065-yard, par-72 championship course is a "sleeping giant," says Hale Irwin, the 1974 U.S. Open golf champion.

And anyone hoping to win the British Open title—and the $16,500 that goes with it—must be praying the giant doesn't wake up.

Peter Oosterhuis, the tall British favorite, tamed Carnoustie on Wednesday with a four-under-par 68 to gain the lead in the field of 155.

But Jack Nicklaus, the favorite, also tamed this famed course and stands just one stroke back going into today's second round.

Tied with Nicklaus were Irwin, Australians Jack Newton and Bob Shearer, and South Africans Andries Oosthuizen and David Huish.

Almost without exception, the leaders came to grief on the last hole—a 448-yard, par-four split twice by a looping burn that cuts across the fairway and again just in front of the green.

Nicklaus was five under par at one stage but fired a bogey on the final hole to lose a share of the lead. Also bogeying No. 18 were Oosterhuis and Irwin.

The consensus among the players is that the course was relatively docile Wednesday. But all of them were wary about what could happen if the wind—so far scarcely strong enough to ruffle the flags dotting the course—should suddenly blow in from the sea.

Cowan Leader

KITCHENER Ont. (CP) — Gary Cowan of Kitchener has had more than his share of problems with the seventh hole on the Westmount Golf and Country Club course.

Cowan, who leads the Ontario amateur golf tournament going into today's third round, has shot a double-bogey six on the par-four, 443-yard hole for two consecutive days.

"It's my favorite hole," said the 26-year-old, two-time U.S. amateur champion. "It's a par six, isn't it?"

Cowan has a 143 total after two rounds on his home course, shooting a 71 Wednesday after an opening-round 72.

Cowan says he s got a mental block concerning the hole, and can't seem to shake the jinx.

However, that seemed to be his only problem Wednesday as he carded the only sub-par round of the day. Cross-winds, which weren't a factor in the first round, whipped through the trees giving most of the golfers problems.

Mike Meslia of Toronto, the first-round leader, soared to a three-over-par 75, giving him a 145 total and a tie for second place with 18-year-old Rod Spittle of Niagara Falls, who has rounds of 72 and 73.

Sixty-two players made the cut set at 158 for today's round. A further cut to the low 40 and ties will be made after today's round for the final round Friday.

CPGA Championship

The Serious Play To Begin Today

TORONTO (CP) — Par has been taking a beating in pre-tournament action but a couple of the favorites feel the good times won't last when serious action begins today in the Canadian Professional Golfers' Association championship.

George Knudson and Ben Kern of Toronto turned in the most recent of the record-breaking rounds Wednesday when they both shot 64, seven under par on the 6,445-yard Bayview Golf and Country Club layout and two under the course record set by Artie McNickle of Sacramento, Calif., when he won the Ontario Open last year.

Earlier, defending champion Moe Norman of Gilford, Ont., fired a 66 and Bob Panasiuk of Windsor, Ont., a 65 in unofficial practice rounds.

The 64s by Kern and Knudson tied them for first in Wednesday's pro-am event.

Bolts Paced By Thompson

QUEBEC (CP) — Boston Bolts pulled into a fifth-place tie with Quebec, defeating the Caribous 15-13 in the only National Lacrosse League game Wednesday night.

Brian Thompson scored four goals to pace the Bolts and Chuck Lt. John Allen and Brian Davisdon added two each. Brian Evans scored three goals for the losers, while Murray Cawker, Dave Durante, John McDonald and Bruce Murdock had two apiece.

For years, Sam and the guys have been trying to get old Betsy back on the road. So far, the only thing that's gone right is their beer.

Judge Approves Sale of Penguins But What Next?

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A United States judge has approved the sale of the bankrupt Pittsburgh Penguins to a group headed by Columbus, Ohio, businessman Al Savill. But one major question remains to be answered before the $2.8 million transaction is completed.

That is, who will get the National Hockey League's $600,000 franchise fee—the league or the court, which would distribute the proceeds from the sale to the Penguins' creditors.

U.S. District Court Judge Hubert I. Teitelbaum left the question unanswered when he approved the sale to Savill and his two partners on Wednesday. The NHL board of governors will take up the issue of the sale Friday in Toronto.

The league contends that the Penguin franchise ceased to exist when the club went bankrupt, and the new owners must buy a franchise from the NHL.

Lawyers for three guarantors of the club contend, however, that the franchise is a tangible asset of the club, just as players and office equipment are, and should be included in the sale price.

"I'm holding in abeyance whether the $600,000 franchise fee belongs to the club or the league," said Teitelbaum.

He approved the sale on condition that none of the $600,000 would be paid by Savill to the NHL for one year, saying that will give guarantors time to file objections concerning the franchise fee.

The bankrupt club has known debts totalling more than $6.5 million, including $1 million to the NHL, $383,200 to the Internal Revenue Service and $5 million to Equibank.

Lawyers for guarantors said they want to make certain the $600,000 is not a back-door way of paying part of the NHL debt.

Meanwhile, Savill said his partners include Wren Blair, who was general manager of Minnesota North Stars for eight years before he was fired about a year ago, and Otto N. Frenzel, board chairman of the Merchants National Bank and Trust Co. of Indianapolis.

Blair owns Saginaw Gears of the International Hockey League. He also spent seven years with the Boston Bruins organization.

LOCKRIDGE — Big brother Johnny is pleased to announce the arrival of his sister, Marlaine Ann, born on Tuesday, July 8th, 1975 at Lennox and Addington County Hospital. Proud parents are John and Mary Lockridge. Special thanks to Dr. Miller, Dr. Thomson and nurses.

IN MEMORIAM

MORGAN — In loving memory of a dear father, Bert Morgan, who passed away July 10, 1971.
One year has passed since that sad day
When we lost our loved one called away.
God took him home — It was His will,
Within our hearts he lives still.
—Ever remembered by daughter and son-in-law, Mary Elizabeth and Harold.

MORGAN — In loving memory of a dear husband and father, Bert Morgan, who passed away July 10, 1971.
Not one day passes by
A memory fond and so active mind,
Always thinking of others kind.
A loving husband and faithful friend,
The years roll on and we miss him still,
But this they know and comfort bring,
Bert is happy in heaven dear.
Which we will meet by God's grace.
—Dearly loved by his wife Made line.

SMITH — In loving memory of a dear husband, father and grandfather, Irv, who passed away July 10, 1974.
The years may roll on and life go by
But this they will not forever.
Memories are dear, time never fears.
When we were all together.
—Always remembered by Marb, Barb and Ron and families.

BRANT — In loving memory of a dear brother Carl Brant, who died at Dearborn, Michigan, who passed away July 10th, 1971.
O happy hours we once enjoyed,
How dear to our remembrance still.
But death has left a vacant void,
The world can never fill.
—Always remembered and sadly missed by sisters Shirley and Bette and brother Ken and family.

MORGAN — In loving memory of a dear father, Mr. Thomas Henry Morgan, who passed away July 10, 1971.
Sweet memories are all we have
Of a loved one gone to rest.
And those who knew him best
Are those who loved him best.
The flowers may wither, the grass grow, Star will fall and leaves blow,
But we will not forget who lies beneath, Who never had a care.
—Ever remembered by sons, daughters and their families.

MORGAN — In loving memory of a dear father, Mr. Thomas Henry Morgan (Bert) who passed away July 10, 1971.
From hospital bed to Heaven's door,
Dad's pain and suffering are over,
You suffered so much and bore it so dear,
You have deserved what you went through.
We did not there to see you die,
To hold your hand and say goodbye,
But you stood the test and did it well,
And with reverence we honor you therefore.
The last words we had with you,
Were spoken to our loyal friend by son Harold, daughter-in-law Barbara and girls.

CARDS OF THANKS

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our sincere thanks to Dr. Ketcheson, Dr. Kibber and all the nursing staff and aides in the physiotherapist of extended care, 4th level for their kindness to our late husband during his stay in Belleville General Hospital. We also wish to express our thanks for the cards and flowers. To Mr. Vancleef and Mr. S. Sheppard of the Funeral Home, Rev. J. Abbott, Rev. Shahm, Rev. Ferguson, the ladies who served the luncheon at the church and to those who gave lifts to Hazel Ford and Gideon Bilton. To the ladies who so graciously prepared lunch and served after the funeral and all who contributed to the care we think you one and all. Mary Ann Bilton.

Mrs. Hazel Frederick and family.

We wish to thank our many friends, neighbors and relatives for the beautiful gifts, flowers and cards received for our 40th wedding anniversary. Our thanks particularly goes to our daughter Sister Beal and family for the lovely dinner and gifts they got and those who helped in any way with the wonderful party.

George and Reta Albers.

I would like to express my sincere thanks to Father Grainger, Father Brennan and Dr. Moyland, the nurses and staff of the intensive care and fifth floor for their kind care, and to my family and friends for their cards, flowers, visits, telephone calls and gifts. Flowers and cards during my stay in hospital were lovely.

Sincerely, Mrs. Theresa Jamieson.

CARDS OF THANKS

I would like to express my sincere thanks to my many friends, relatives and family for lovely flowers, gifts, cards, visits and telephone calls. Special thanks to Dr. Ketcheson, Dr. Kibber, Dr. Moyland and the nurses. To all the friendly nurses and staff on the orthopedic floor for their kindness for the three and half months I was a patient in Belleville General Hospital. Special thanks to Rev. and Mrs. Ferguson who came to see me in hospital that took part in helping me recover. Their friendship all meant so much to me.

Sincerely Elaine Evans.

ENGAGEMENTS

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest C. Moore, Oshawa, are happy to announce the forthcoming marriage of their daughter, Gerta to Mr. Brian H. Gerry, Belleville, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ken Gerry, Belleville. Husky Savior

Biologist Tries to Save Huskies

Biologist Bill Carpenter is surrounded by purebred Eskimo huskies at his home near Yellowknife, N.W.T. The 33-year-old Calgary native, who estimates there are fewer than 250 purebred Eskimo huskies in Canada, blames snowmobiles and cross-breeding with pet dogs for their shrinking numbers. (CP Photo).

(CP) — "The howling that drifts in Bill Carpenter's living room from the huskies outside is eerie and deathlike. But it's the sound of life."

Mr. Carpenter, a bearded biologist and local kennel owner, is trying to save the purebred Eskimo husky from extinction. Its frame house on the fringe of this territorial capital is proof.

The 33-year-old Calgary native estimates there are fewer than 250 purebred Eskimo huskies in Canada. Forty of Kenting left in Canada. Forty of them are penned and chained to pens.

He bought some of the animals and was given some by of the Eskimos of the High Arctic, where the husky, pushed to the brink of extinction by the snowmobile and cross-breeding with pet dogs, is making its last stand.

Technically, according to the Canadian Kennel Club records, the Eskimo husky is extinct.

It was among the first breeds recognized by the club 85 years ago, but there hasn't been a husky registered with the club since 1965. Mr. Carpenter discovered that the breeding stock in kennels had simply died out.

With no pedigreed Eskimo huskies, there were no dogs officially recognized as having the blood lines of the pure-bred animal.

Despite the optimistic start for his project to re-register the Eskimo husky as a pedigreed animal and return the new generations of dogs to the Eskimo people and selected southern breeders, Mr. Carpenter is concerned that the future of the animal still isn't assured.

The project could falter if it doesn't receive some help, he says.

Mr. Carpenter has spent $2,500 of his own money and received the support of Pacific Western Airlines, which donated $3,000 worth of freighting and boarding to fly some dogs from Resolute Bay to Yellowknife. The government of the Northwest Territories, where Mr. Carpenter works as a research officer, has also helped out as have smaller northern air carriers such as Northward and Kenting.

But the project's requirements are more basic now.

The dogs need larger pens and are robbing up $50 worth of food weekly.

"We're in desperate need of some kind of sponsorship until such time as we can have the line registered and the breeders set up," said Mr. Carpenter.

"We've gone this far, but I can't go any further on my own."

Unless he receives some financial help, Mr. Carpenter will have to sell the dogs just to pay his bills.

"I don't want to do that, because that's putting it on a commercial basis."

He expects it will be three to five years before his breeding of the three strains he has collected is completed. Then, with three generations of huskies, he will have sufficient documentation of the dogs' parentage and purity to register them with the Canadian Kennel Club.

Some dogs would then be returned to Eskimo communities interested in breeding purebred huskies. Others will be sent to Eskimo outcamps where they can return with their masters to the traditional life-style.

Before any dogs are sent south, Mr. Carpenter will consult with the Eskimos and seek the advice of the Canadian Kennel Club on whom the huskies should be given to.

U.S. Cannons Will Boom Across Abraham Plains

QUEBEC (CP) — American-manned cannon will boom across the Plains of Abraham in October, marking the 200th anniversary of an American invasion of Canada.

"Ceremonial troops" now are training on both sides of the border for re-enactment of the 1775 assault by American flintlock riflemen on this fortress city during the American Revolution.

But only blanks will be fired as Americans and Canadians dramatize a little-remembered episode of history when Quebec beat back the revolutionary attack with the fate of half a continent hanging in the balance.

The invasion linked such diverse figures as Benedict Arnold, who led one American force in a killing march through the wilds of Maine and Quebec province to the gates of this city, and Benjamin Franklin, who led a fruitless diplomatic mission to a conquered but restless Montreal.

Maj.Gen. Richard Montgomery, the American commander, had come up Lake Champlain and the Richelieu River through Montreal only to die here in a blast of fire ordered by his aide-de-camp, Aaron Burr, later vice-president of the United States. Montgomery was succeeded in the American command by Benedict Arnold, later a traitor to the American cause.

What are the terms of interest for American bicentennial visitors and history buffs in Canada?

Some historians say the defeat of the French by the British on the Plains of Abraham in 1759 set the stage for the American revolution 16 years later even though George Washington's forces failed to bring the "14th colony" into the union.

A top federal tourist official now sees an opportunity for Americans and Canadians to visit "their shared history, particularly in the east "where it all began" but also in th other regions.

"We plan to take account of the U.S. birthday in a neighbourly way and to develop tourist events with a bicentennial flavor," said Dan Wallace, director general of marketing for the Canadian government office of tourism.

Shaping up as the most spectacular event is the Oct.4 mock battle, which will be followed by dancing and tourist tours around the bluffs and historic ways of this city, founded in 1608, one year after Jamestown. Two American columns representing the Arnold and Montgomery advances and perhaps totaling nearly half the original 2,000-strong attacking army will converge on Quebec against a smaller defence contingent marshalled by Victor Sullerot, curator of war art with the Canadian War Museum, Ottawa.

"When it was learned that a force was coming in a second on Quebec to re-enact a battle in which a significant Canadian victory had been won, it was determined that Canadian participation had to occur," said Mr. Sullerot, whose volunteers come from Toronto, Kingston, Montreal and Lunenburg, N.S., as well as Ottawa.

Mr. Sullerot has support from the Compagnie Franche de la Marine and the Fraser Highlanders of the old fort on Montreal's Ile Ste. Helene, a strategic island in the St. Lawrence in revolutionary days and eventually site of Expo 67.

While responsibility for defence in 1775 rested on British Governor Sir Guy Carleton, sufficient French-and English-speaking Canadians fought together to indicate hope for a but separate country.

American participants of the October events say the issue now is "Canada versus the foreign menial" army and militia units failed to take Canada.

What was the turning-point? Some in this exercise in it exercise in the commercial Arnold, later a traitor to the American cause.

PUTS OFF DECISION

BARCELONA, Spain (AP) — The International Lawn Tennis Federation put off a decision Wednesday on admitting China and expelling South Africa. Derek Hardwick of Britain, new president of the federation, said the motion to admit China in place of Taiwan was withdrawn by its sponsors—Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Iran, while South Africa was not discussed because the 80 per cent of delegates necessary to take up the question was not achieved. A decision on both questions thus was put off until the next meeting set for July, 1976.

LAPOINTE SIGNED

DETROIT (AP) — Rick Lapointe, 19, has been signed to a multi-year contract with Detroit Red Wings of the National Hockey League, general manager Alex Delvecchio said Tuesday. The 200-pound defenceman from Victoria was Detroit's top draft choice this year. Terms were not announced. LaPointe scored 19 goals and 31 assists last season and spent 177 minutes in the penalty box for Victoria Cougars of the Western Canada Hockey League.

NAMED LPGA HEAD

NEW YORK (AP) — Ray Volpe, vice-president for marketing with National Hockey League Services, has been named commissioner of the Ladies Professional Golfers Association, it was announced Tuesday.

NAMES CREWS

HAMBURG, West Germany Beuteri — West Germany crew name crews Wednesday, including Tempest class world champion Uwe Mares, for next week's pre-olympic yachting regatta in Kingston, Ontario. The West German Sailing Association nominated two crews each in the Finn Dingby, Flying Dutchman, Tornado and Tempest classes and one Solings class crew.

SIGN MASTERS

ST. LOUIS (AP) — St. Louis Blues of the National Hockey League announced Wednesday the signing of 20-year-old defenceman Jamie Masters, their second choice in last month's NHL amateur draft. Masters led all defencemen in scoring in the Ontario Hockey Association Major Junior A series last season, picking up 26 goals and 69 assists for 95 points for Ottawa 67's.

EXPOS GET MCMULLEN

MONTREAL (CP) — Montreal Expos have signed outfielder Dale McMullen, their second-round choice in last month's free-agent draft, the National League baseball club said Wednesday. McMullen, a righthanded batter who hit .416 and had 14 home runs with St. Pius High School of Houston this season, is to report to Lethbridge Expos of the rookie Pioneer League.

CORBETT RELEASED

TORONTO (CP) — Billy Corbett, a 275-pound offensive tackle who chose the Canadian Football League ahead of the Nfl, was released Wednesday by Toronto Argonauts. Russ Jackson, Argos coach, said Corbett's inability to switch from tackle to offensive guard was the reason for the release.

DISALLOWS PROTESTS

NEW YORK (AP) — Lee MacPhail, president of baseball's American League, disallowed Wednesday two protests of games, Cleveland Indians protested a July 1 defeat to Detroit, saying the Tigers' Aurelio Rodriguez interfered with a play between home plate and first base. Minnesota Twins had complained about a game against California, saying Angels manager Dick Williams had made excessive visits to the mound to talk with pitcher Nolan Ryan.

NEGOTIATIONS OFF

NEW YORK (AP) — Negotiations between National Basketball Association owners and the players' association were suspended Wednesday, the league announced. Alan Rothenberg, chairman of the NBA labor negotiation committee, blamed "the players' refusal to bargain in good faith about three of the issues in the current labor contract negotiations"—college draft, option clause and compensation to a team which loses a player who plays out his option—for the halt.

DELAY ACTION

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House education and labor committee voted Wednesday to delay action on legislation that would modify sex discrimination regulations being proposed by the department of health, education and welfare. The committee voted to send the separate pieces of legislation back to subcommittee—a bill that would allow colleges to use income from athletic producing sports to cover expenses of those sports, and a resolution that would eliminate provisions requiring colleges to achieve compliance with the regulations and set up procedures for alleged violations.

2 Close Fits In SHBL Games

Close games were the story Wednesday night in the South Hastings Baseball League, as both scheduled contests were decided by one run.

Shannonville defeated Read 6-5 with Lenny Marsele picking up the win; he gave up five hits.

Pat McKinney took the loss, allowing six hits.

Bill Barbeprick led the winners with two singles and a double while Jason Morris' single drove in three runs.

Deseronto defeated Latta 5-4, with Steve Heifferman picking up the win; he gave up nine hits and one walk while striking out seven.

The loss went to John Hill and Dale Bamber, who gave up four hits and five walks allowed four runs.

Wayne Brant pounded a home run for Deseronto to lead them to the win.

Bamber hit two round trippers and a single in the loss.

Minor Softball Roundup

Peewee Squads Busy

Peewee teams have had a busy time of it recently, as quite a number of games have been played in Belleville Minor Softball Association action.

Belleville Kinsmen Squirts did well against Malcolm Brothers, defeating them 27-12.

Doug Bennett and Mike Miller took the win with Dennis Tam powering a homer, a double and a single for Kinsmen.

Richard Ellis defeated Dixie Lee 14-2 with Rusty Downey taking the win, with relief help from Ted Ums.

Branch 99 House League Dart scored 22 runs as they handed a 22-12 loss to Stephen Lennox.

Daryl Brennan hit two homers and a triple, along with a double to help his team to the win.

Richard Ellis was victorious over Westgate Carpet 18-8 as Rusty Downey picked up another win.

Stephen Griffin had five hits for the winners, while Downey had three singles.

Stephen Lennox gave Westgate Carpet another loss and a adouble to the win.

Brian Clarey took the loss, although he hit two singles and powered a homer.

Fraser and O'Neil had little trouble defeating Sun Luck Gardens, as they won 22-12 with Rick Pickell and Craig Holoway picking up the win.

Going to the Bantam division, the Belleville Police Association was victorious over Shell Car Wash 21-7.

Tim McWilliams took the win as well as hitting a home run.

Ron Morning and Ron Dearobee each hit homers for the losers.

Your Horoscope

By BERNICE BEDE OSOL

For Friday, July 11

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You have good, innovative ideas today. Put your mind to work on a plan for some new but profitable venture.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) The means to carry out an expensive beautification of your home will unexpectedly become available. This will fulfill a long-time desire.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) La Dolce Vita—the sweet life—beckons. You'll be ready, with plenty of invitations to the social whirl and no time for boredom.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You'll be unexpectedly rewarded for a good deed done without thought of gain. It will increase your prestige and be of material benefit.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Dare to think on a grand scale today. You are attuned to making expansive plans that can have great impact on the future.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Others look to you for leadership in handling their material possessions today. You guide by setting a good example.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You can derive great satisfaction from your popularity with friends today and a reinforcement of love with your mate.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) A job that requires working with the hands will be easy today, though you felt formerly that you lacked the skill.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) This is the day for an unexpected meeting that will kindle a new romance or lead to a new social setting. Accept all invitations.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You're the king or queen in your home today. Your reflexive outgoing manner makes you the center of activity for family and friends.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Accept that last-minute invitation to go out on the town with some pals—chase the blues you'll have if alone.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) You're good at doing things of a domestic nature today. Efficiency is your strong suit. Change you make will be impressive to others.

To Your Good Health

Vinegar Won't Help Dieter to Reduce

By G. C. THOSTESON, MD

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I have tried all kinds of diets in order to lose weight. But none of them has ever worked for me. I have read that it's a germ drinks vinegar in a glass of water at each meal, it will reduce your weight, so I tried it.

To my delight it worked. I have lost 15 pounds in just a few months. I drink four tablespoons of apple cider vinegar in a glass of water four times a day.

What I am concerned about is the possible danger to my health. Someone told me that drinking that much vinegar could cause ulcers in the stomach. Is this true? Would you advise me to continue doing this?—Mrs. D. H.

I can't buy the vinegar. It is rather bitter, and I think that would help lose weight.

You must have reduced your calorie intake in some way to have shed the 15 pounds. Vinegar is a rather weak acid. So is the stomach environment. It might injure your teeth enamel before it would your stomach. If you had an ulcer, you might experience some irritation from this, however.

But I see no point in continuing the vinegar. It has no magic capacity for causing weight reduction, and the whole idea represents a fixation on a notion of just how the human body acts.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: You mentioned that there are camps available for diabetic children, where their particular needs can be provided for. Last summer, it was helpful, and the thought put me on the right track in getting my child to a place where he could enjoy summer activity like other youngsters.

Won't you please repeat this information in your column so that other parents can be advised about it?—Mrs. T. E.

I am happy to, and I'm pleased it was useful information for you.

Diabetic camps are available, and parents should be aware of them.

Regular camps usually are not equipped to handle such needs as the insulin or the matter of special diets or insulin therapy.

For some years now various branches of the Canadian Diabetic Association have been organizing camps, providing medical supervision and proper dietary information.

If you do not have one in your area, you may be able to get information about the nearest one to you from your local association or from your local medical association.

You can also write for information to the Canadian Diabetic Association headquarters at 149 Yonge Street, Toronto, Ont.

Exercise, fresh air and the outdoor experience are every bit as valuable to the diabetic child as to others.

If such facilities are not available in your area, you could begin now to provide for next summer. You might try interesting other parents and officials in the idea of having a regular camp set aside a week or two as periods when diabetic children can attend.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Are there medical tests to determine if one has osteoporosis?—Mrs. A. J.

This is a lessening of bone density, which is, in part at least, a condition that can be caused by aging. The condition is readily detected by x-ray, and it is often discovered accidentally in x-rays taken for other reasons.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Recently, while visiting a friend's home I noticed that their cat was sleeping in the crib with the baby. Is there any danger in this?—Mrs. A. V. T.

The cat should be kept out of the crib.

Cats and dogs are cuddly pets and like the warmth of the baby's body. However, I don't think this degree of intimacy is wise. If the cat spends any time out of doors, it can carry germs and skin infections that can be transmitted to the infant.

TEMPERATURE RISES

So many trees have been cut in the forests surrounding Quetzalva, Mexico—the "City of Eternal Spring"—that the temperature has gone up 30 degrees.

Opening lead — Q ♥

By Oswald and James Jacoby

You don't have to make a free bid. Any time you know that your partner is going to bid again, you may pass after action by an opponent.

Today's hand was played in a strong duplicate game with very few pairs reaching the ninth club slam. Actually, some played in three notrump with conspicuous lack of success after a spade lead by East.

At the table North didn't know what to do after West's heart overcall. He might have done almost anything, but made the wise choice of a heart cue bid. East didn't like his hand. No one can blame him for not liking it but East decided to do something.

He doubled the cue bid. That double gave South a chance to pass to see what North meant by his cue bid.

North bid three clubs. South went to four clubs. He could afford this because North's two-heart bid had announced that North was going to game in any event.

Then, North made the key bid of four diamonds. South jumped to six clubs and it was all over.

Note that with this hand Blackwood was not usable. With clubs as trump a Blackwood response to slam one ace would get the partnership too high.

Ask the Jacobys

This question from Vermont: "What is the difference between a double?"

In rubber bridge when you double an opponent's game bid and he makes the contract you haven't given him his game. He has already bid it. On the other hand, such doubles aren't anything like free. He gets his trick score doubled and gets 50 for his contract. If he redoubles and scores an overtrick your free double will really have been expensive. So don't make them unless you really expect to set the declarer.

(Do you have a question for the Jacobys? Write "Ask the Jacobys" care of this newspaper. The most interesting questions will be used in this column and answers will appear in THE JACOBY MODERN.)

Montreal Air Canada's Worst

MONTREAL (CP) — Most Montreal residents think it is fragranted their air and water are polluted.

Their air was recently reported to be the most polluted in Canada, while the water from their toilets pours unceed MTC's own maximum acceptable levels, including sulphur dioxide which has corrosive effect on the sensitive linings of nose, throat and lungs.

Some of the other major pollutants in the city's air come from the estimated one million vehicles that trade the city centre each day. About 1,000 tons of vapourized lead is estimated to be deposited in Montreal's air by motor vehicles daily.

Carbon-monoxide levels often reach the point at which those suffering from cardiac or respiratory problems are in danger.

There have been frequent suggestions that action be taken to reduce the number of cars in the downtown area, but Mr. Hanigan says this is not necessary.

Critics aim darts not only at the municipal government, but also at the provincial government.

The main criticism is that there is no department of the environment in the Quebec Cabinet. Instead, it appears there is a minister, Dr. Victoria Goldbloom, who also holds the municipal affairs portfolio.

The Environmental Protection Service is a sub-department under the department of municipal affairs. But the executive director of the service is a department in every respect except in name.

Critics have suggested that Dr. Goldbloom is in a conflict-of-interest situation by having the two posts since, they say, she must protect the financial interests of the municipalities by permitting industries to pollute.

As for water pollution, Dr. Goldbloom says Montreal's sewage treatment plant will begin operations in 1981 when a sewage treatment plant will begin operations at a cost of $300 million.

But another study reports that sulphur-dioxide content in the air over Montreal's east end increased last year, the Laval Industrial Foundation study shows that three major pollutants in the air over the east end greatly exceed MTC's own maximum acceptable levels, including sulphur dioxide which has corrosive effect on the sensitive linings of nose, throat and lungs.

Some of the other major pollutants in the city's air come from the estimated one million vehicles that trade the city centre each day. About 1,000 tons of vapourized lead is estimated to be deposited in Montreal's air by motor vehicles daily.

Best Job Market in Canada Here? Researchers Uncertain

By COLIN BRUCE
Staff Reporter

While an independent survey released Thursday shows Belleville as having the most prospective job market in Canada, a spokesman for the polling company says the results are misleading.

The survey revealed that more than 85 per cent of the industries approached here forecast their personnel requirements will increase during the years third quarter, July, August and September.

Authors of the survey Manpower Temporary Services of Toronto are established authorities in job market evaluation, said the city's industrial commissioner Fred Bemis. This most recent survey marks the 71st such document published by the firm.

Belleville manager for Manpower Temporary Services Shirley Campbell said during an interview Friday: "It (survey) doesn't really give a fair picture. Job placement is great right now but it can be up one minute and down the next."

She said approximately 10 Belleville firms were canvassed, while an average of 40 companies were surveyed in the other communities, which included Brockville, Edmonton, Halifax, Kingston, Toronto, Vancouver, Winnipeg and Peterborough.

Commenting on the unusually optimistic Belleville figures, she said: "I don't want to get a lot of people's hopes up."

With such a large percentage of Belleville employers forecasting increases in staff requirements, Belleville stands alone and apart from the general Canadian economic picture according to the survey.

"The survey of 1,003 companies (across 24 provincial capitals and major urban centres) is cautiously pessimistic about the immediate future—of Canada's economy," the report stated. On a national scale, 22 per cent of companies surveyed forecast staff increases.

The remainder of the firms responded their requirements would either remain static in the third quarter or decrease.

"Disappointing in the survey results are the findings from Kingston at 12.8 percent forecasting increases — down from 28.1 percent forecasting increases in the same quarter in 1974," the survey states.

Industrial commissioner Bemis was elated when he discussed the report during an interview with this paper Thursday and said: "The whole thing just shows that Belleville's economy is way up. Belleville stands alone from the rest of the country."

Mr. Bemis said it would be difficult to pinpoint why Belleville had such a solid employment picture while other nearby municipalities such as Kingston and Brockville would not.

"We have a great deal of stability through the diversity of industry which has located in the city," he said.

"We have had a lot of new industry come to the city which is increasing its staff requirements as the new business grows," he said.

"Generally, this survey shows an optimism on the part of Belleville employers that business is on the upswing."

The report states certain areas of industry generally responded very optimistically than others. These areas are beverage producers, bakery companies, public utilities and agricultural implement manufacturers.

Compared to Belleville's 85 per cent predicting staff requirement increases, the next most optimistic centre was Regina with 66.4 per cent.

June Prices Jump Before Gas Hike

OTTAWA (CP) — Sharply higher food prices, particularly for meat, pushed consumer prices up during June at the fastest rate in more than a year, Statistics Canada reported today.

The 1.5-per-cent rise in the consumer price index was the largest since May, 1974, when the index rose 1.7 per cent, and ended a trend of relatively low monthly increases which started in January.

But the worst is yet to come. Statistics Canada warns the June figures do not fully reflect the 10-cents-a-gallon excise tax on gasoline announced in the Jue 23 budget. That tax measure alone would add a one-half percentage point to July's consumer price index, Statistics Canada estimates.

The Food Prices Review Board predicts food prices—which accounted for more than 40 per cent of the June index change—will continue to rise later in the year. Beef prices were up an average 18 per cent in early June, bringing their level back to that of about a year ago, Statistics Canada said.

Egg prices are also rising, because of government restrictions on imported eggs.

The rate of increase in food prices, seasonally adjusted over a one-year period, was 19.5 per cent in June. That compared with a 4.6-per-cent rise a month earlier. It was the fastest increase for any month so far this year, but still below the increases for each of the final three months of last year.

However, excluding food, consumer prices were up only about eight-tenths of one per cent, about the same rate of increase as during each of the last six months.

Costs for housing, both owned and rented, were once again a major factor in the over-all rise, accounting for most of the increase in the index excluding food. Urban Affairs Minister Barney Danson now has conceded government targets for housing starts will not be met this year. Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. has predicted mortgage rates will rise.

Besides housing, higher prices for dry cleaning and laundry, services, higher inter-city air, rail and bus fares and increased prices for recreation equipment pushed up all the major components of the index in June.

Hydro's Increase May Be Lowered

TORONTO (CP) — An Ontario Hydro counsel said today that senior management officials are recommending that the utility's request for a 29.7-per-cent rate increase for 1976 be lowered.

Pierre Genest, utility lawyer, told an Ontario Energy Board hearing dealing with the proposed increase that it will not be known until August what the recommended increase will be.

The move follows protests about the size of the increase, which would add between 23 and 34 to the average monthly bill for Metropolitan Toronto residents.

Mr. Genest said the utility will make a submission in August showing a "substantial reduction" in revenue required for 1976.

Socialists Quit Portugal's Regime

LISBON (CP) — Portugal's largest political party, the Socialists, quit the coalition cabinet today after the country's leftist military rulers took over publication of the party newspaper.

The Popular Democrats, who with the Socialists took two-thirds of the votes in the April 25 constitutional assembly election, were expected to follow the Socialists out of the cabinet, ending the facade of public representation in the military-controlled government.

The two parties each had two ministers in the 20-man cabinet but had no voice in the policy of the military regime. This is set by the officers of the Armed Forces Movement (AFM) who overthrew the fascist dictatorship nearly 15 months ago and its politburo, the Revolutionary Council. The military also controls the government administration.

The Socialists quit after the party newspaper Republica, closed eight weeks ago after its Communist printers occupied the newspaper plant, resumed publication Thursday with an army officer as editor and the printers in control.

A Socialist statement, describing freedom of the press as a crucial issue, said the party's leaders "decided that" cabinet ministers and secretaries of state immediately cease their functions in the government."

Party leader Mario Soares was a minister without portfolio and Francisco Salgado Zenha was justice minister.

The statement said they would not return to the government unless the newspaper was restored to the party's control.

The first edition of Republica under its new management said it was now "an independent newspaper free of party totalage which will effectively serve the interests of the Portuguese people and the working class in particular."

Wilson Holds Wages Down

LONDON (Reuter) — Prime Minister Wilson announced today that future negotiated wage increases for workers must be kept to a maximum of $13.2 a week in order to curb Britain's inflation.

Those earning $18,700 a year or more will get no increases at all.

Mother and Children Injured

Joanne Baldwin, 18, of RR 6, Belleville, and her children Sanya, seven months old and Laverne, 23 months old, were admitted to Belleville General Hospital today following an early morning, single-car crash on Highway 14 just north of Belleville. The three are listed in satisfactory condition. Mrs. Baldwin is being treated for back and pelvis injuries and both children are under observation for head injuries. Police said the car was southbound when the accident occurred. The car was demolished on impact with guard rails at the side of the road.

U.S.-Soviet Nuclear Talks Set for Finland July 30

GENEVA (AP) — U.S. State Secretary Henry Kissinger says he and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko are making progress in their talks about Soviet-American Nuclear Agreements.

Kissinger also said he and Gromyko support the Canadian proposal to begin the 35-country European security summit conference in Helsinki, Finland, July 30. Malta is now the only country that has not agreed to that date.

The United States diplomat and the Soviet foreign minister met for seven hours Thursday night, discussing such things as issues blocking a new treaty to limit the stock of offensive nuclear weapons in the two countries and the bombers and missiles that can deliver them.

"The discussion still is going on, but progress has been made," Kissinger told reporters.

Kissinger declined to say whether Gromyko had brought a detailed proposal to resolve the conflict over which Soviet missiles to count as multiple-warhead missiles (MIRVs).

President Ford and Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev at their Vladivostok conference last November set a tentative limit for each country of 1,320 such missiles. The U.S. has proposed including all Soviet missiles big enough to carry MIRVs, but the Russians reject this.

This unresolved issue is considered the major obstacle to conclusion of a 10-year treaty in time for Ford and Brezhnev to sign it during the visit the Soviet leader is expected to make to Washington this fall.

A senior U.S. official indicated that the progress was made in connection with the agreement to limit underground nuclear-weapon test explosions to 150 kilotons, beginning next March.

He said the Soviet Union may be prepared for the first time to allow on-site inspection to determine whether it is complying with the agreement. No conclusion has been reached, but progress is being made, Kissinger said.

The Russians are insisting that there be no ceiling on underground nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes, such as digging canals, diverting rivers and excavating mines. The U.S. is inclined to agree with this if the Russians agree to inspection of the explosion sites.

Joint Space Shot Readies for Tuesday

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Activity quickened at launch sites half a world apart today as Russian technicians began joining a Soyuz spacecraft with its booster rocket and American astronauts continued rehearsals for the U.S.-Soviet space mission set for Tuesday.

In a telephone report to his American counterpart at the Houston Space Center, Vladimir Konstantin D. Bushuyev, Apollo-Soyuz technical director for the Soviet Union, said preparations were on schedule at the Baikonur Cosmodrome.

Bushuyev and American technical director Glynn Lunney that the rocket and spacecraft will be moved to the launch pad on Saturday.

The movement of the Soyuz to the launch pad just three days before launching underscores the Russian approach of conducting most of the prelaunch checkout in a hangar. Weather often is severe at Baikonur, with ice storms in the winter and heat waves in summer. The temperature there Thursday was 113 degrees.

Stafford, Slayton and Brand planned to spend several hours in the Apollo simulator today, rehearsing various phases of the mission. Thursday they underwent final hours of physical examination and were pronounced in "superb" condition by a team of space agency doctors.

Ford Raises Car Prices

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. indicated today that prices on 1976 cars and light trucks may go up six per cent or about $333 a unit—over comparable 1975 vehicles.

The possible increase is in line with a six-per-cent increase hinted by General Motors Corp., the industry's acknowledged pricing leader.

A Ford official said dealers were notified this week that prices on new cars and light trucks for fleet purchasers will reflect a maximum six-per-cent increase over current prices.

Dealers also were notified of a minimum seven-per-cent increase on heavy-duty trucks.

Discrimination, Rent Hikes Some Landlord-tenant Issues

The Quinte Information and Assistance Centre here has released some examples of the increasing number of landlord — tenant problems it has investigated this year.

Bill Hockley, a centre staff member, said Thursday complaints of eviction notices crop up quite frequently.

In Trenton, Tenant A advised the fire department that each time she touched a switch, she received a shock. After an investigation, the inspector ordered the landlord to make repairs within five days. Such repairs are mandatory under the Landlord and Tenant Act.

However, Tenant A was handed her eviction notice. But the centre found that under the act, no tenant can be evicted for taking action under the legislation.

Although not as frequent, racial discrimination was apparent in another case when a landlord agreed to lease an apartment to prospective Tenant B.

Tenant B returned just prior to moving with her husband, who is black. Immediately upon meeting her husband, the landlord said he had changed his mind. No reason was given.

Then there was the landlord who raised the rent of Tenant C twice within six weeks — and the two bedrooms in the apartment had no windows — just solid walls.

The centre advised Tenant C to send a registered letter to the landlord stating he would not pay any rent, let alone the increase and was also told to inform the Hastings and Prince Edward Counties Health Unit.

And there was the landlord who, for no discernible reason, turned off the water and hydro to the apartment of Tenant D, who was informed by the centre to get an injunction and complain to the Children's Aid Society.

Tenant E rented an $80-a-month apartment and was told by the landlord to hand over post-dated cheques for the next 12 months. Although Tenant E had signed a lease it didn't matter—such cheques are not allowed under the act.

Flag Raising

Since a special ceremony held Dominion Day, a replica of the battle flag of the Hastings Prince Edward Regiment has been flown outside the armory. Daniel Zylenko, 18, a member of the Summer student Employment Activities Program at the armory has the honor of raising the flag.

Program Aims to Teach Outdoor Skills, Crafts

The streets of Belleville may soon be filled with rugged, hardy pioneer individualists if this years outdoor recreation program is successful.

The program, under the auspices of the recreation department and offered to children aged 12-16 years, is intended to allow the urban child to become more independent.

"One pleasant side effect of past programs is the campers develop independence they wouldn't be able to cultivate in city life," says Rob Guay, co-ordinator of the project.

"We want to expose city people to the outdoor experience," he said in an interview.

Each new weekly group of campers arrives at the H. R. Frink Outdoor Education Centre Monday morning after a short ride from Belleville and campsites are arranged and set up.

The daily programs are discussed and an agenda is decided by the camp occupants.

"The camp is a freestyle organization," said Mr. Guay, "with both campers and staff arranging the program most appealing to everyone."

He said in the winter the H. R. Frink centre is used as an educational tool, an extension of classroom learning.

"Our camp is more oriented for leisure living," he said, "where we offer children a way to have fun without having them sit around and be entertained or do something illegal."

The program which costs $10 for Belleville residents and $12.50 for non-residents, includes canoeing, swimming and campcrafts with an emphasis on crafts using natural materials.

The campers are introduced to safety rules about waterrelated activities because most of the time spent at the camp is structured around river activities.

The environment also is incorporated into the program at the camp.

"Meaningful walks with no artificial lighting are taken to show the campers there is nothing to fear in the dark once you become familiar with your surroundings.

"The main project for the summer is to build a permanent camp crafts display," he said. "and perhaps include a log cabin which will be constructed by campers from all six sessions."

The group wants to contribute something to the site, he said.

"We want to leave a permanent camp skills display and the board of education can, if they choose, incorporate into the outdoor education program."

Krogman Faces Seizure Charge

BANCROFT — A 29-year-old Belleville man will appear in court here July 16 to set a date for trial on a charge of forcible seizure in connection with an incident here early Wednesday.

A spokesman for the Crown Attorney's office in Belleville said today George Barry Krogman of 215 Victoria Ave., was released on his own undertaking to appear following a bail hearing in Belleville Thursday.

Ontario Provincial Police at Bancroft were summoned following the abduction of a 22-year-old North Hastings woman on Highway 500 five miles east of this village at 12:45 a.m.

Krogman was arrested at 1:20 a.m. after a complaint of a car revving its motor in a private driveway on the Bronson Rd. here.

After a Hard Day

Many hours after the day began with an early breakfast and a trek to the lake portaging canoes, campers and staff of the Belleville recreation departments outdoor summer session finally relax. Sitting around the campfire are Linda Duffy, front, staff member, David McPhee, 12 middle and Christine Belch, 14 both campers.

Students Study Watershed To Chart Development

By MARG HAYLOCK
Staff Reporter

PICTON — A student group from the Junior Conservationist Award Program this week arrived in Prince Edward County to prepare a resource inventory report of the Consecon Creek watershed, the major watershed within the boundaries of the Prince Edward Region Conservation Authority.

Seven secondary school students, accompanied by group leader Sue Rolff of Orangeville, will spend six weeks in the county working to document the vegetation, water, wildlife and fisheries in the study area. Land use also will be determined.

The group includes Miss Rolff and students Sandra Lucas, Dundas; Andrea Rolfi, Toronto; Kim Carmichael, Amherstburg; Cathy Walsh, Peterborough; Cathy Remus, Chapleau; Jeanne Chibana, Sault Ste. Marie and Anne Champagne, Toronto. The group is billeted at cottages in Rednersville.

Miss Rolff who with her group visited the Prince Edward Region Conservation Authority recreation and education shelter Thursday, says students will establish the land ownership in the proposed dam site areas of Allinsville and Melville. An opinion poll of landowners in the proposed dam sites area will be conducted. Type and purpose of each dam will be clearly outlined.

The Junior Conservationist Award Program is listed under Experience '75 and this summer more than 20 students applied to the ministry of natural resources to join it.

Each student who was accepted for the program is sponsored by a 4-H club, a Conservation Authority, the Girl Guides or other organizations.

Five study teams were selected to work in Ontario this summer.

Miss Rolff notes her group will spend most of its time in Prince Edward County with the exception of a one-week canoe trip to Algonquin Park. A brief orientation period was held for students at Dorset before programs were started.

In Prince Edward County this year, the conservation authority sponsored a local student, John Hollingsline, in the Junior Conservationist Award Program. He saw is working with a study group in Essex County.

Miss Rolff observes that students are usually assigned to study groups in counties some distance from their homes.

When all data gathered by the students here this summer is compiled project results will be submitted to the ministry of natural resources for publication. Copies of these studies will be forwarded to all conservation authorities.

In Prince Edward County, a main goal of the students' project is to make recommendations on future management practices for the Consecon Creek watershed.

This watershed drains waters from four townships, Ameliasburg and Sophiasburg then empties into Weller's Bay.

Watershed Study Topic

The Consecon Creek watershed in Prince Edward County will be studied this summer by a group of students with the Junior Conservationist Award Program under Experience '75. Chairman of the Prince Edward Region Conservation Authority, Henry Leavers, Thursday welcomed the study team to the county and indicated their study area on a map at the PERCA education centre at Macaulay Mountain.

Trenton Still Waiting For NIP Program Grant

TRENTON — Deputy-clerk Arden Boyce returned from a weekend fact-finding seminar on the Neighbourhood Improvement Program (NIP) this week wiser but no richer.

The two-day seminar, set up by the provincial ministry of housing, was geared to acquainting municipal officials across Ontario with various facets of NIP operation.

Mr. Boyce said Thursday his position was one of an observer, since Trenton has still to receive the $700,000 NIP officials allotted the town earlier this year.

At this point, he said, it is difficult to relate to some of the problems surrounding NIP since Trenton has yet to receive its allocation and begin planning its program.

It was announced several months ago that the town had received $700,000, $400,000 less than requested. However, due to delays in signing a master NIP agreement between the provincial and Central Housing and Mortgage Corp. the funds have not reached town coffers.

Mr. Boyce said seminar participants, some with previous experience with NIP, outline problems their municipalities faced in implementing the program.

In some cities, public participation in the neighbourhood upgrading program was nil, said Mr. Boyce. Citizens by their lack of participation, indicated they didn't care what was done.

Internally, some objected to the extensive paperwork necessary to satisfy provincial and federal officials.

It is too early to know whether Trenton, once its program is underway, will face the same problems, said the deputy-clerk, "but I don't see why it would be different from anywhere else."

Mr. Boyce said seminar delegates were told the provincial-federal master agreement was before the provincial Cabinet Wednesday for approval.

NIP money will be spread over five years in a program to upgrade older, and deteriorated homes in up to three of five neighborhoods in Trenton. In council's hands rests the selection of areas and the details of final expenditures.

Up the Creek

Students with the Junior Conservationist Award Program this summer will compile data on the Consecon Creek watershed, the major watershed within the boundaries of the Prince Edward Region Conservation Authority. Chairman of the PERCA Henry Leavers discusses the study with group leader Sue Rolfi.

Vandals Shut off Water At Consecon Dam

CONSECON — Two Prince Edward Region Conservation Authority control dams at Consecon were vandalized Thursday night when water control valves were tampered with.

Community Services Officer with the Picton detachment of the Ontario Provincial Police, Constable Donald Watt said two locks were broken at the dam sites and valves turned to stop the water flow from the main dam at Highway 33. A valve used to control aquatic flow at the village dam also was broken off below water level.

A spokesman for the PCRCA today said the water level in the Consecon Mill Dam, which opened last winter, dropped about six inches, when the valve was shut off at Consecon Lake dam. He observed residents who rely on the water for bathing and drinking purposes were concerned by its loss.

Police estimate damage to the dam-sites at approximately $200.

Woman Attacked

PICTON — A 21-year-old Picton woman was indecently assaulted on Main Street Thursday evening when grabbed by a masked man as she walked to her car.

Det. George Wright of the Picton Police Department, said the woman was dragged from her car by her assailant who was wearing a silk stocking pulled over his face. The woman was frightened off when the woman, whose identity was withheld, kicked him.

The incident occurred shortly after 9 p.m. near Hill's Dairy Store. As yet, police do not have a suspect in custody.

Monument to Mark Hastings Minerals

By NAN WHITLAW
Staff reporter

BANCROFT — The unique mineral collecting capabilities of the North Hastings and Bancroft area are slated to be commemorated in the village by a major mineral monument says mineralogist Dr. Donald Gorman.

"The Bancroft area is one of the most unique areas in the world for mineral collecting," said Dr. Gorman, who is a professor with the University of Toronto.

Dr. Gorman was speaking this week with the Bancroft municipal council and reporting on a project to mark classic mineral sites in the Bancroft area.

Dr. Gorman is working on a grant from the Canadian Geological Foundation and is picking out locations in the Bancroft area.

Dr. Gorman said the historical sites branch of the provincial government intends to erect a cairn in Bancroft to show the mineralogical uniqueness of the area.

Bancroft municipal council passed a resolution to donate land in the museum park in the village so the province could "erection of a cairn."

According to Councillor Rae Carswell, "This is very much what we need in Bancroft."

"Bancroft is the most natural place in the world for a cairn of this type," said Dr. Gorman," It also is the right place for a mineralogical museum."

Mineralogist Dr. Donald Gorman, Bancroft Reeve Russell Hawkins and Chamber of Commerce representative Ivor Macleod discuss the possible location of a mineral cairn for the Bancroft area.

CHRISTIAN STREET — The Picton detachment of the Ontario Provincial Police this week is investigating the theft of 100 chickens from the Christian Street farm of Vincent Kelly.

The fowl were reported stolen from a farm barn between July 7 and 11.

'Black Hell' Awaiting 18 Female Canoeists

By AL ZABAS
Staff Reporter

TRENTON — Black Hell, a mile-long portage between Big Gull Lake and Kashawanai Lake, is both the highlight and the toughest part of a proposed 70mile, week-long canoe trip says Heather James.

The 17-year-old "tripper", as she calls herself, is one of two Trenton recreation department supervisor in the town's Out Tripping program, that will see up to 18 Trenton teenagers canoeing and camping in the wilderness.

Miss James said Thursday the Black Hell will be met by her charges with anticipation: "Everyone is psyched-up for it."

It involves portaging canoes about a mile, over bare rock, bog and just plain bush. The trip must be made three times — once with canoes over the back, and then back to get backpacks, and then back again to continue the voyage.

Miss James and, as of Thursday, eight teen-age girls will be making the trek over the Black Hell sometime next week. They leave from Trenton early Sunday for Lake Maginaw where canoes and other supplies are kept.

The "out tripping" is the third of four week-long trips for town teen-agers organized for the third year by the recreation department.

Assistant recreation department.

Assistant recreation director Sharon Gaudaur said Thursday that it has proved to be a popular one, although registrations this year are down.

She attributed the drop to the increasing number of such canoe trips now undertaken by Trenton schools. Trenton High School and several groups of senior elementary schools students have trekked into the bush this year.

Mrs. Gaudaur said places still remain open for the all-girl's trip that begins Sunday. An all-boys trip (age limit 12 to 17) has six canoe seats unfilled.

Participants bring personal gear such as bed rolls and all else — cooking utensils, food, and tents and canoes — are supplied in the $3,000 summer program. Registration costs are set at $30 per person $70 less than a comparable program run by a private camping or canoe club.

And what does one learn? Basic conservation of wildlife, and basic wilderness survival skills, says Mrs. Gaudaur.

And that's learnt quickly, says Miss James. Teen-agers learn that "if you want supper, you have to do something to get it, either collect fire wood or cook."

You learn how to share and get along with people, she says. Out-trippers soon learn to work as a single group: "You don't get the chance to be a loser."

Reeve Stresses Pool Need

PICTON — A recent drowning at Outlet Provincial Park has prompted Picton reeve Larry Richardson to reemphasize the need for a community swimming pool here.

Reeve Richardson this week told town council the death of a six-year-old Kingston child underlines the importance of a pool where youngsters can learn to swim in safety.

"There's no reason why a six-year-old should not know how to swim," he said.

Reeve Richardson added he is eager to see the Prince Edward Swimming Pool Committee reactivated for the organization of "a huge fund campaign".

He noted that the swimming instruction site at Wesley Acres considered for use this summer by the Picton recreation and parks committee is much too shallow for a swim program to be conducted.

About 100 children have been enrolled in the program and it will now be necessary to move instruction to the North Marysburg property of Jack Wells.

Water Tight

There aren't many things worse than cooking soggy food or crawling into a wet sleeping bag after a hard day of paddling. Makoon Ortelli, a camper from Joy Bible Camp, near Bancroft inspects his pack to make sure it is water tight.

District at a Glance

Licence Now Needed

PICTON — Town council has passed a Transient Traders bylaw requiring new businessmen who have not resided continuously in Picton for at least three months to pay a $250 licence fee before starting trade.

Farmers selling their own produce will pay only $5 for a licence.

Cyclists to Tour County

OUTLET PARK — Bicyclists from across Ontario will visit Outlet Park August 2,3, and 4 to join in a bike tour of Prince Edward County.

The tour is co-ordinated by the Ontario Cycling Association and its goal is to introduce the public to the enjoyment of country bicycling.

Many of the bike tourists will camp at Outlet Park while others will stay in nearby hotels and motels.

Beauty Contest Opens

PICTON — Entry blanks for the Miss Gold Cup contests now are available. Participants must be between 18 and 25 years of age, single and residents of Prince Edward County.

The competitions will be held Friday, August 29 at the Elk's Hall. Deadline for entries is August 22.

Rare Berries Found

KALADAR — Grant A. Loyst, of Scarborough, found a patch of albino huckleberries (blueberries) while picking the fruit on the mountain north of the village of Kaladar.

Dance Planned

TAMWORTH — An old time night will be held in the Tamworth Arena on Saturday evening, with local talent providing much of the entertainment with Bill Adams actings as the master of ceremonies.

The Goode Family Band will provide the music for dancing.

Other programs will include organ duet, specialty dances and other features.

A Socialist Canada ? It's Here for the Most Part Under Liberal Government

By JOHN D. HARBRON

Foreign Affairs Analyst

Thomson News Service

How much socialism does Canada need, or want? You won't get the answer from the recently concluded leadership conference of the New Democratic Party.

Their cry for a socialist Canada, heard since the Regina Manifesto, is indeed no longer a cry in the wilderness, though the NDP is fighting every way from ever becoming a national government.

Their best proposals for state intervention in the economy, whether it's in the transfer payment side, or in the growing use of crown corporations, have long ago been pre-empted by successive Liberal governments.

The crafty Mackenzie King stole them blind, after being elected in 1935 on the decision that last-minute Conservative welfare measures hurtyred Ernie Bay and his CCF, were unconstitutional.

By 1939 such measures as unemployment insurance, the so-called "brother" treaty big in touchy Quebec where families were given cash, other state welfare schemes, and placed Canada on the road to social democracy.

In our own time and since his election in June, 1968, Pierre Elliott Trudeau is seen by some at the Liberal national convention as the man who have had. He has socialized the state and furthered government far beyond Mr. King's era.

The two basic social policies of the Trudeau years (at least form, more or less concluded), are social reform, pensions, housing, welfare, the guaranteed annual wage, still in curvy, have stolen more policies away from the poor NDP.

In fact the prime minister was once a card-carrying member of the New Democratic Party and close to socialist thought himself in the dictatorial Quebec of the 1950s and early 60s.

That is hard to fathom from successive NDP public events in its party's treasured call for more and more state control of industry and the prices which have failed miserably where socialist governments have taken them over provincially.

I suppose socialists can be just as dumb and hard-headed as their determined opponents in the private sector, seeing our complex and pluralistic society as a division of "them" and "us."

This pursuance of the Churchillian wartime dictum, "the that is not with me is against me," is only part of the lingering surfeit of ideas and memories of the 1930s which has influenced Douglas and Davis Lewis but one hopes not the new NDP Leader Ed Broadbent.

Some of these have come from the international socialist community. For a long time many critics of Canada's economy blamed the whole idea of socialism derived in hard-Canadian soil as an ideological input from British immigrants.

The recent leader of the party was indeed not an import, but rather an Eastern European one who brought with him his keen sense of social justice from a part of the world where totalitarian regimes easily encouraged these sensitive men like Mr. Lewis.

In fact his retirement gift of luggage for himself and Mrs. Lewis and tickets to the International Conference of Socialists in Switzerland, is a reminder that European socialist, Canadian socialist has been sought at NDP conferences as fraternal delegates and often as very inspiring speakers.

God forbid that Ed Broadbent may want to learn any lessons from socialist Britain these days.

Orangemen's Parade

Everyone loves a parade. As at least one letter though, indicates, some may have reservations about tomorrow's parade of Orangemen.

King Billy rides again as a far-off victory, in 1690, of the Protestant forces of William of Orange over the Catholic troops of James II at the Battle of the Boyne in Ireland is celebrated.

But why blame the Orangemen exclusively for religious bigotry in Ireland, or for the violence of the past six years in the north, or for any spillover of such sentiment, however mild, in this country?

A Belleviliian who has watched many a Twelfth of July parade in Belfast recalls not so much as a single unpleasant incident arising from them. A few sore heads maybe, from too much of the strong stuff ,but that was all.. The only weapons to be seen: the ceremonial swords and pikes of the marchers. Of all ages they were, men and boys, women and girls. There were the bands, and a spectator of any religious persuasion would be hard put to it not to enjoy the strains of The Sash My Father Wore and others. Indeed, there would be many a Catholic among the crowds. And didn't they have their parades too, sponsored by the Ancient Order of Hibernians?

These people were no rabble, but a well-dressed, disciplined organization standing up for their beliefs. That they have done so for more than 300 years says something for the strength of those beliefs. If some are as bigotry, then it's not their preserve alone.

As for the horrors perpetrated through civil disturbances in Northern Ireland since 1969, it will be recalled it began with protests by Catholic Civil Rights organizations. Most of their complaints have long since been rectified, but as everyone knows what began as mere protests escalated into violence. The Irish Republican Army, which had been dormant for a number of years, re-emerged and ultimately the Protestants formed their own guerrilla groups. The British army became heavily engaged and direct rule was imposed on Ulster by the Westminster.

As of now there seems to be a lull in hostilities, and it is surely everyone's hope that peace will become a reality there. Meanwhile, it is well not to confuse tomorrow's event in Belleville with the more extreme events in Northern Ireland in recent years.

Further Gasoline Price Boosts Raise Ire of U.S. Politicians

By BRUCE LEVETT
WASHINGTON (CP) — Ripoff!

It's a 1970s word and it's being heard increasingly with the sudden increase in gasoline prices in the United States.

Gasoline prices rose and stocks fell about 18 months ago, when the war in the midst of the Arab oil embargo and the consuming public was uncertain at question just who is responsible for the rise in such embargo in force at the moment and the driving public is beginning to question just who is responsible this time.

And the U.S. oil companies are taking the stalic.

With presidential elections on the horizon, politicians—not unexpectedly—are beginning to make the most of the situation.

Senator Henry Jackson (Dem. Wash.), with a "Me Too" endorsation from Senator Adlai Steven (Dem. Ill.), has announced a special Senate investigation.

Jackson, who tried for the Democratic presidential nomination last time and is having another go at it this time, is head of the Senate permanent subcommittee on investigations.

Stevenson is boss of the Senate commerce subcommittee on oil and gas distribution and production.

Jackson and Stevenson have announced they will try to determine whether oil companies purposely cut refinery production in order to raise gasoline prices.

Federal energy officials said last week they expected gasoline prices to take a seasonal hop of three to five cents a gallon this summer—bringing the price for a U.S. gallon of regular into the 60-cent range. The U.S. gallon amounts to five-sixths of an imperial, or Canadian, gallon.

Several major oil firms have already announced price increases—and they did it just as many Americans were preparing to drive off on the July Independence Day weekend, probably the most mobile holiday weekend in the U.S. calendar.

"The price of crude oil has dropped because of glemital supplies both in this country and abroad, yet, since January, gasoline prices have risen sharply while the refineries have been operating at reduced levels," Jackson and Stevenson said in a statement.

"Clearly," they said, "the oil companies have manufactured a shortage through manipulation of refinery output so they could raise retail gasoline prices as much as seven cents a gallon during the season vacationing Americans buy more gasoline."

More than one analyst in the U.S. is decrying presidential and congressional action—or lack of it—on this issue.

As one columnist put it, "the rise in gasoline prices announced just before the July 4 weekend provides a model of how the American system works—at very nearly its worst."

Public opinion is confused by suspicion of the big interests, he writes. First the president and then Congress have ducked the issue.

Oil interests, therefore, have indulged their greed in a way that hurts the weakest people "and fertifies among the rest of us the suspicions which prevent any policy consensus."

No matter who is responsible or how high the price goes, the motorist who pulls up at the pump is being heard to employ—more and more—that 1970s word "rip - off!"

Shulman Calls it Quits

Dr. Morton Shulman, who some time ago indicated he would not fight in another provincial election, has given up on a more decisive plan to run against Premier Davis in his Brampton riding.

His decision stems from NDP party leader Stephen Lewis' decision — understandable enough — to give no undertaking that Dr. Shulman would become Justice Minister in the event of an NDP victory.

In short, Dr. Shulman's decision — he is the member for High Park, in Toronto — is as it was originally: he will not run in the next election.

Had Dr. Shulman entered the fray in Brampton the outcome would have been a disappointment, for Ontario needs both its Bill Davis' and Morton Shulmans. Aside from that, and with Shulman out of the running, his decision gives rise to some intriguing thoughts in the what-might-have been category. Dr. Shulman reportedly did some canvassing in Brampton during the holiday period and he says a survey conducted for him recently showed him ahead of Davis and Liberal leader Robert Nixon, in that order.

Certainly an Ontario legislature without Morton Shulman will be a less colorful and probably less effective instrument of government. Even if his political philosophies and methods were not everyone's cup of tea, he exhibited a keen social conscience. As an Opposition member, he prodded the Government relentlessly.

The one-time Toronto coroner and political maverick, it will be recalled, was ill briefly a few years ago. It turned out to be a case of exhaustion from overwork and after a short break in Mexico he was back to Queen's Park.

Later it seemed he was going through a period of disillusionment with provincial politics and there came the announcement he would not seek re-election.

Then came the possibility of a contest in Brampton — under conditions which proved unacceptable to party leader Lewis.

Shulman himself summed it up appropriately when he said: ". . . things go on. Parties change and leaders change."

Contractual Link with EEC Is Less Desirable Perhaps Than Trade with U.S. on Mend

By VINCENT EGAN

Business and Consumer Affairs Analyst

Thomson News Service

Would a "contractual link" with the European Economic Community (EEC) give a boost to our sorely lagging export trade?

Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau evidently thinks it would. But a close look at the factors affecting Canadian-European trade leaves the question in serious doubt.

Mr. Trudeau, in office since 1968, didn't get around to making an official visit to EEC headquarters in Brussels until this year.

But when he did call on EEC, he brought a vague proposal for a contractual link—apparently some sort of special terms to apply to Canadian-European trade.

Either through a sense of courtesy or as an act of faith, most EEC member-countries accepted the proposal without knowing just what it meant.

France was the only dissenter. Now it has changed its mind and supports the contractual link—for a typically French reason. France thinks its former colony is too closely linked to U.S. trade. (Our trade with the United States is about 10 times the size of our trade with EEC countries.)

The same reason undoubtedly occurred to Prime Minister Trudeau, as it did to John Diefenbaker when he was prime minister and tried to divert 15 per cent of our trade away from the United States.

Diversification of trade is fine, and putting all your eggs in one basket is unwise. But —The U.S. economy is recovering, interest rates there are at a low ebb, and distribution is under way. If there were ever a time to foster our economic ties with the United States, this is it—when our economy is mired in recession and the British economy is in serious difficulty.

—Mr. Diefenbaker's political decisions did not change the well established pattern of Canadian-U.S. trade, and Mr. Trudeau is unlikely to turn the tide of trade.

—The Europeans have achieved a high degree of economic self-sufficiency, and need us less than we need them. The EEC's contribution for an agreement with Canada might well be too harsh for us to accept.

When the question comes down from lofty prime-ministerial policies to the nitty-gritty of actual trade, the outlook for a mutually satisfactory trade link becomes still more complicated. Consider a couple of examples:

—Ontario has decided, in effect, to discriminate against imported cars by reserving its five per cent retail sales tax on most North American cars. West Germany's Volkswagen, which opened up the small-car market here 20 years ago, will be among the hardest hit.

The provincial action clearly runs contrary to the spirit if not the letter of international tariff agreements and could invite retaliation by European countries.

—France has resolutely and successfully used its legal war in Canada against Canadian grape-growers and wine-makers on the basis of a badly drafted 1933 trade agreement between the two countries. As well, it blocked the imports of Canadian and other foreign wines into France earlier this year.

In short, there's a distinct shortage of the goodwill and motivation, on both sides, that would lead to a successful contractual link between Canada and the EEC.

Book on Ancestry

Editor,
The Intelligencer:

I am writing a book "How to trace your ancestors in Canada" and would be much appreciate the co-operation of your readers.

The Registration of Births, Marriages and Deaths has been completed in all the Provinces or Territories since the period from 1869 to 1875 that the ancestor hunter has to depend on church records. These are widely scattered some in the National or Provincial Archives, in local churches, some in local libraries, and some in the private hands. There is no central record of these locations and so, if any of your readers is a knowledgeable in the whereabouts of church registers prior to 1880 I would be happy to hear from them.

I would also like to "know about the location of old graveyards and burial grounds which were in use before the above date.

If any of your readers can send me information on the above subjects I will be very grateful.

Participatory Democracy at Work on Immigration But Not on Law and Order

By RICHARD JACKSON

OTTAWA — There is a stance contradiction in the basic political philosophy of Prime Minister Trudeau's government.

It has surfaced in an exchange of correspondence between Justice Minister Otto Ling and Conservative MP John Reynolds.

Both men are westerners, Lang of Saskatchewan, Reynolds of British Columbia. And both hold strong and conflicting convictions.

They have been arguing, in an exchange of letters, about immigration, and crime and punishment.

Both have engaged intense public interest and so involve the people's powerful political voltage.

The government, if the current of public opinion runs strong enough, could suffer a shock with either of them, even if the next election now seems a long time away.

The increasingly strong charge of political electricity humming through the circuits of public opinion could be just that long lasting.

For the hotly controversial issues of crime and punishment — especially capital punishment — and immigration have little chance of quick settlement and almost none of unanimous public acceptance.

Regardless of what decisions the government and Parliament make — and the Liberal majority in the Commons will have its way — there will be many thousands of disciplined if not altogether disturbed and resentful Canadians.

There seems little middle ground, both issues are emotional, and are polarizing the voters.

On one side are the hard-liners. On the other are the bleeding hearts.

Bleeding hearts?

A perfectly proper and very acceptable term. But.

For it was initially used in Parliament by Prime Minister Trudeau himself when he spoke of those who were outraged by his use of the armed to cru in crushing the Quebec terrorists as "a bunch of bleeding hearts."

Immigration and capital punishment are now such hot political issues that they have cracked and broken the government's basic political policy — its very philosophy, as the Prime Minister has called it, of "participatory democracy."

John Reynolds, a strong law-and-order advocate, had written Justice Minister Lang asking why, if the public is being consulted on immigration policy, it is being ignored on the capital punishment issue.

That is where "participatory democracy" comes in.

"It is the obligation, indeed the measure of responsible government, to solicit the views of its constituents in the formulating final policy," writes Mr. Lang.

"The Green Paper on immigration was prepared to promote public discussion of this issue and to provide the government with different points of view so that future policy would reflect the wishes of public involvement."

But on capital punishment, the public can but out. The government has its own point of view, and who wants to bother with public involvement?

Control Parlors

TORONTO* (CP) — Paul Godfrey, Metropolitan Toronto Chairman, said Thursday a new bylaw controlling beauty parlors should include a regulation compelling operators to produce names and addresses of clients.

Doctors Upset

TORONTO (CP) — Some Canadian doctors may adopt a militant approach to fee increases as a result of measures taken by the federal government in its budget, says Dr. Bette Stephenson, former president of the Canadian Medical Association (CMA).

Electrical Problems

GUELPH, Ont. (CP) — Dr. Walter Scott, coroner for Wellington County, said Thursday information from the Ontario fire marshal's office indicates an electrical problem may have caused a fire Monday at the Wellington Hotel.

Grain Sale Important

WINNIPEG (CP) — A major grain sale to the Soviet Union could have a significant impact on the Canadian economy as well as Prairie farmers, the president of Manitoba Pool Elevators said Thursday.

Prices Bounce

MONTREAL (CP) — Sugar prices bounced up this week following their gradual decline from a record high last November.

Textiles Depressed

MONTREAL (CP) — Quebec's depressed textile industry appears to be on the road to recovery as mills start rehiring staff.

Statistics supplied by the Canadian Textile Institute show that in many regions, employment has risen from December, 1974, when an estimated 4,000 textile workers were unemployed. About 2,000 more were laid off in other parts of Canada, mainly Ontario.

Investigates Fraud

TORONTO (CP) — A committee should be set up which includes medical representatives able to investigate possible fraud against the Ontario Hospital Insurance Plan (OHIP) by patients or doctors, a government committee has recommended.

Reopens Contract

OTTAWA (CP) — The government and public service unions have agreed to reopen and extend contracts for certain employees in response to union pleas for more pay to counteract inflation.

Denies Fight

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau denied suggestions Thursday that his government will fight inflation by allowing health services to deteriorate.

OTTAWA (CP) — Solicitor-General Warren Allmand appeared receptive Thursday to Ontario Solicitor-General George Kerr's proposal that all gun owners be required to show licences when buying ammunition.

Little Chance

OTTAWA (CP) — A cabinet official said Thursday he believes there is little chance for action on a Economic Council of Canada report recommending minimum wages and free trade as a way gaining at least five per cent in national output.

Won't Commit Funds

TORONTO (CP) — Ontario told the federal government Thursday it will not commit funds at this time to build access roads to the proposed federal airport at Pickering, Ont.

Opposition Leader Robert Nixon called the move "blatant electioneering."

Further In Debt

OTTAWA (CP) — The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority dropped $18.85 million further into debt in 1974, bringing its total debt to the federal government to $784.6 million, it was disclosed Thursday.

The information was contained in the seaway's 1974 annual report, tabled in the Commons by Transport Minister Jean Marchand.

Approves Coins

OTTAWA (CP) — The Commons is expected to approve today a bill authorizing the minting of a 1976 Olympics gold coin. All-party agreement to resume debate on the bill was reached Thursday.

Workers Defy Union Advice

TORONTO (CP) — Steelworkers at the International Nickel Co. of Canada Ltd. (Inco) plant in Sudbury defied advice from their union that they return to work at midnight Thursday night and remained off the job.

However, workers at Inco's Port Colborne plant reported on their regular shifts.

Norm Carriere, vice-president of Local 6500, United Steelworkers of America (USWA), said he wasted the 12:01 Sudbury members back on the job after a tentative contract agreement had been reached early Thursday by union negotiators.

Membership meetings will be held Sunday through Wednesday to explain the terms of the settlement. A ratification vote will be held next Friday.

Workers, upset over the secrecy surrounding the negotiations and the company's last-minute offer, held an enormous membership meeting attended by 600.

Elliott, Fisher Sentenced

HAMILTON (CP) — The Hamilton Harbor affair came to an end Thursday with Kenneth Elliott, former harbor commissioner, sentenced in Ontario Supreme Court to six years in prison and businessman Robert Fisher to three years.

The men were convicted July 4 on 10 counts of conspiracy, fraud and uttering forged documents after a lengthy trial concerning kickbacks and payoffs on dredging and construction work in the Hamilton Harbor between 1966 and 1972.

In sentencing the pair, Mr. Justice Thomas Callan said he felt Elliott, 42, "would stop at nothing to satisfy his insatiable desire for money."

He also said he believed Elliott brought Fisher, 42, into the $250,000 scheme to defraud the harbor commission because of the man's banking experience.

The charge included five counts of conspiracy, three of uttering forged documents and two of fraud. The Crown had asked Mr. Justice Callan to sentence the men to a consecutive term on each transaction.

Costs Double For Olympics

QUEBEC (CP) — Estimates for total cost of the 1976 Montreal Summer Olympic Games have risen by $148 million from $210 million in 1973, a committee of the Quebec National assembly said Thursday.

The standing committee on municipal affairs, studying budget estimates for the Games, agreed on the total development cost Thursday after Montreal Mayor Jean Drapeau, Mr. rapeau had told the committee revised estimates put the cost of the Games at $714 million.

Estimates do not include the $74 million village being built to house the athletes. City officials hope to recover the investment through rale of the village as condominium units.

An agreement to reintroduce federal legislation to permit minting of gold Olympic coins in 1976 (Canadian mint) reached late Thursday after Mayor Drapeau made a rush visit to Ottawa.

The coins could add another $40 million to estimated revenues of $60 million but even so the Games face a possible deficit of at least $100 million.

Sources of revenue for the Games include sales of commemorative silver coins, stamps and lottery tickets.

Last January Montreal officials revised cost estimate to $310 million, blaming inflation, plan modifications, technical difficulties and strikes for the added costs.

Committee member Claude Charron (PQ-St. Jacques) said cost cuts promised by Montreal last January had failed to materialize.

"If we suggest, for instance, that the lamp standards could be replaced by others that would be less luxurious, we're shamed accused of destroying the Olympic spirit."

Britain Makes No Promises to Amin

LONDON (AP) — Foreign Secretary James Callaghan says he made no concessions to Ugandan President Idi Amin in his freedom for Denis Hills.

Returning from Africa with the British teacher Amin had condemned to death, Callaghan thanked the Ugandan military dictator for his "magnanimity."

Hills, 51, was sentenced in June to face a firing squad for calling Amin a village tyrant in an unpublished manuscript.

Callaghan said Hills now will be "a period of long convalescence in Britain's relations with Uganda. This release foreshadows an improvement.

"President Amin told me that he wishes the Ugandan people ally to stay there, that he values their presence and that he would like more Britons to go out to work there."

Hills told an airport news conference: "I am a little bit bewildered at this sudden change in my fortune. I should apologize for causing all this trouble."

He said he regretted calling Amin a village tyrant and had offered him a written apology.

Hills said he had been happy in Uganda and would like to return. He also said he hoped his manuscript, The White Pumpkin, would be published. "I might like to revise part of it."

A resident of Uganda for 12 years, Hills taught at Makerere University in Kampala until several years ago. He left an Ugandan wife and two sons in Uganda.

Callaghan said his treatment during his three months in custody was "perfectly correct according to the regulations which, no doubt, are much the same all over the world. It would be really unfair of me to make any complaint."

About 700 Britons are still in Uganda, a former British colony that still is a member of the Commonwealth. Many others left in 1972 after Amin expelled 40,000 Asians with British citizenship and nationalized British firms.

Commons Approves New Oil Company

OTTAWA (CP) — The Commons gave final approval Thursday to a bill establishing the country's first national petroleum company.

Third reading, the last major hurdle to parliamentary passage, came as the Commons adjourned for the day in hot, sticky weather.

Debate droned at the end but produced one last exchange. Energy Minister Donald Macdonald called Peter Rawlen (PC—Calgary South) "a bit of a fool."

Progressive Conservative MPs, led by Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield, left the House en masse in a brief protest but returned moments later for the final vote. The bill carried 112 to 62.

Senate approval and routine royal assent are required before the bill becomes law.

Conservative MPs were joined by Jean-Robert Roy (Longueuil) in opposing the bill. NDP and Social Credit MPs voted with the government.

Mr. Roy was not available for comment on why he voted against his party.

The corporation, to be known as Petro-Canada, was first proposed in 1973 when the then-minority Liberal government was under heavy pressure from the New Democratic Party to move into the foreign-dominated petroleum industry on a massive scale.

Reintroduced after the 1974 election, the bill retains the sweeping powers it was given when drafted originally.

But in practice the corporation will be only a shadow of what the NDP demanded.

It will not give the government powers to move into all aspects of the oil business in nationalize such giants as Imperial Oil and Shell Canada.

But, as Mr. Macdonald made clear, the new agency's powers are provisionary and may never be used.

Trudeau Blames Grossman

TORONTO (CP) — It was beneath the dignity of the prime minister's office for Pierre Trudeau to blame him for allowing the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) admission to Canada, Allan Grossman, Ontario secretary of state for urban development, said Thursday.

"I am shocked that the prime minister should stoop so low as to look for a scapegoat in the absence of his own ability to exert a courageous decision."

Mr. Grossman was commenting on a statement by Mr. Trudeau in the Commons Thursday during discussion of the possibility a PLO delegation may attend a UN conference on crime here in September.

It was Mr. Grossman who "stuck his head out and invited the PLO here in the first place," Mr. Trudeau stated.

Mr. Grossman said Mr. Trudeau had apparently decided to blame the presence of the PLO in Canada on him either because he is Jewish or an Ontario cabinet minister.

Cabinet's Power to Commute Executions in Jeopardy

OTTAWA (CP) — The first moves to limit the cabinet's ability to commute death sentences came in the Commons this week in the form of two private members' bills.

The effect of both bills would be to shift from the right to grant mercy from the cabinet to the trial jury.

A bill drafted by John Reynolds (PC—Burnaby Richmond Delta) would enable the cabinet to commute only when at least one of the 12 jurors recommends clemency.

Former diplomat Donald Munro (PC—Esquimalt-Saanich) introduced a bill to limit the cabinet to commuting in cases when a majority of the jury—more than six—recommend clemency.

The federal cabinet increasingly has leaned on jury recommendations to justify commutations. Prime Minister Trudeau recently told the opposition that it had not, in the last death penalty debate in 1973, made any move to limit the cabinet's power to commute.

Since 1968, the death penalty has existed in law only for killers of on-duty policemen and prison employees, but no one has been hanged since 1962. There are indications that the government soon will try to abolish all capital punishment.

The cabinet has commuted five death sentences since 1968. In three of them, all jurors recommended clemency. In the other two, the jurors made no recommendation.

If the Reynolds or Munro possibilities became law, the cabinet would have been unable to commute in the latter two cases.

Nine men now are appealing or awaiting a cabinet decision on their death sentences.

If the Munro bill had law, the cabinet would be unable to intervene in six of the nine cases. The Reynolds bill would mean the rope for five of the nine.

Both Mr. Munro and Mr. Reynolds interpret no recommendation as a recommendation against clemency.

"What they are telling the government is that they don't want to recommend mercy," says Mr. Reynolds, who has presented to Parliament a 200,000-name petition asking for the use of the death penalty.

"What juries are doing is leaving the decision to the cabinet by making no recommendation.

Immigrant Students May Have Problems

OTTAWA (CP) — A presentation showing that immigrant school children have special problems provoked mixed reactions Thursday from the special parliamentary immigration committee.

Progressive Conservative Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock) said he does not agree that children of immigrants are stress than other children.

"How would you like to go through school with a name like Benno Friesen?" he asked. "I did and I survived."

Lincoln Alexander (PC—Hamilton West), the only black MP, said Mr. Friesen might have had a tougher time if "your name was Benno Friesen and you also happened to be black."

The committee came during presentation of a Toronto school board brief on multiculturalism to the committee. Committee chairman Gordon Cressy said more than 50 per cent of Toronto school students come from immigrant families,

CITY OF BELLEVILLE — LOCAL IMPROVEMENT NOTICE

TAKE NOTICE THAT:

1. The Council of the Corporation of the City of Belleville intends to construct as a local improvement the following watermain, with private water service connections where required by an individual owner and intends to specially assess a part of the cost upon the lands abutting the work and the balance against the Corporation at large as follows:

Street	From	To	Est. Cost	Corporation Share	Owner Share	Est. Cost Per Foot Frontage of Watermain	Est. Annual Cost Per Foot Frontage of Watermain	Est. Rate Per Service Connection	Est. Annual Payment Per Service Connection
Un-named	Existing 16" Dia. Watermain on Centre St.	249.5 ft. Easterly	$8,462.00	$4,697.37	$3,764.63	$12.0501	$1.59471	$215.00	$26.280267

EXAMPLE: (Watermain Only)
Lot with 50 ft. frontage would be assessed as follows:
50 ft. x $13.0501 = $652.51
$652.51 at a period of 15 years at 8¾% per annum
the annual cost would be 50 ft. x $1.59471 = $79.74

2. The special assessment is to be paid in 15 equal annual installments.

3. Application will be made by the Corporation to the Ontario Municipal Board for its approval of the undertaking of the said work, and any owner may within 21 days after the first publication of the Notice, file with the Clerk of the Municipality his objection to the said work being undertaken.

4. The said Board may approve the said work being undertaken, but before doing so may appoint a time and place when objections to the said work will be considered.

Cumberland Pottery:

Hard Work Brings Rewards for Wilton Couple

Husband-and-wife potters — the Codys, the Coviields, the Davies — have been part of the Quinte crafts scene for some time. In the tiny village of Wilton, 25 miles east of Belleville, there's yet another potting couple who are making a name for themselves.

Ken and Diane Cumberland have been in Wilton five years now, and have established themselves as potters who sell their work in nearby Kingston as well as in Toronto and Ottawa. Like many other married craftspeople, the Cumberlands have divergent approaches, and produce distinctively different pieces.

Diane's specialty is porcelain, using smooth, delicately-shaded glazes on seemingly fragile vases, bowls, and goblets. Ken, however, devotes himself to stoneware. He creates hanging pots, lamp bases, coffee mugs — functional items with strong lines and natural, earthy colors.

"My basic premise is that people should have pots and use them," says Ken Cumberland. "I'm not elevating my craft to an art, but I'm making pots so that lots of people can buy something handmade by some clown who lives in the country."

The Cumberland's method of working is an "all or nothing" approach that gives them two months off in the winter for a Florida holiday, in return for incredible perseverence during other months.

"I consider a day in which I've made fewer than 300 pots a disaster," says Ken. "I work daily from 8 a.m. to 1 a.m. for two months, and then collapse. When I sit down to pot, I have to be productive, since I only work one day in 10 to make enough to support us.

"Like other potters in this area, that's our main problem — making enough through our pottery to take care of all our costs."

The Cumberlands' expenses include heating the old schoolhouse in which they live and work. Their propane bill for their massive walk-in kiln, in which they fire up to 700 pots each time, is as high as $250 a week.

Diane and Ken have spent time as well as money renovating and adding on to their old stone schoolhouse, making a studio and showroom on the ground floor, and a three-floor living area at the back of the building. The plain-and-plaster simplicity of their home says a lot about the relaxed kind of lifestyle they have chosen.

Ken, who had studied sociology, and Diane, who had been at the Ontario College of Art, both attended Sheridan College before leaving Toronto life behind. Now they are bent on becoming as self-sufficient as possible, and have planted a huge garden behind the schoolhouse.

Fruit bushes and trees, rows of vegetables and berries testify that hard work is paying off, and that the Cumberland's have put down their own roots. In the summer months, besides gardening and tending their pottery showroom, they find time for swimming and horseback riding, as part of their "work hard, play hard" philosophy.

Visitors to the Cumberland potinery will most often find the potters at home, willing to stop and explain their pottery-making process, or to chat about their garden.

Story and Photos by Isabel Huggan

Diane Cumberland stands in the doorway of the enormous kiln that she and her husband use for the firing of their pottery. The 100-square-foot kiln has its entrance sealed with bricks and clay for 24 hours while the firing and cooling process takes place. The heat of the propane kiln reaches 2500 degrees Fahrenheit.

Ken Cumberland throws a vase at his potter's wheel for his own enjoyment, since this is not his "heavy working" season. Although he produces a large volume of pottery, he prefers the kick wheel to an electric one, because of the rhythm set up between himself and the clay.

The old stone schoolhouse where the Cumberlands have created their pottery studio and home is on the tree-lined main street of Wilton, a tiny hamlet north of the 401 highway, about 12 miles west of Kingston.

Spending a cool moment in the Cumberland showroom is the family Afghan hound Kaolin, named after a type of clay used in the making of pottery. Some of Diane's and Ken's work is on view in the background.

IODE Roses Can Be Replaced

Several Belleville residents who purchased the 75th anniversary IODE roses sold by local chapters this spring have had problems with their bushes. Happily, a solution is available.

Inquiries and complaints should be addressed to John Schloen, Ellesmere Nurderies, RR 1, Brooklin, Ontario. Mr. Schloen has guaranteed replacement of rose bushes that did not grow by July 1 at no cost to the recipient except postage.

When the bushes were first mailed in May, unseasonably hot weather and rotating mail strikes caused some bushes to arrive in poor condition. Because of this, the Ellesmere Nurseries will replace the roses, specially-bred red floribunda bushes for the IODE.

There will also be a fall delivery of roses—Mr. Schloen had been guaranteed orders for 50,000 fall-planting bushes by March 20, and between then and April 1, he received 14,000 more orders. He has promised to fill these orders, and offers the same replacement guarantee for these bushes as for the spring planting.

The Belleville Parks Department had excellent results from the fall planting they made in 1974, and these bushes are now in city parks.

Because of volunteer labor, costs of administration have been kept low by the IODE, so that for each bush sold, $1.75 has been returned to the provincial chapters involved.

In Ontario, this money is being used for the operation of a mobile clinic, staffed by four specialists in the field of genetic research. The clinic will go to isolated areas of the province, where the specialists will provide information and counselling.

In Belleville, co - chairman of the rose committee have been Loreen Ellis of St. Julien chapter, and Stella Milroy of Argyll chapter.

Photographer and Subject—Electricity Must Flow

NEW YORK (AP) — Francesco Scavullo, the photographer who does those sensuous Cosmopolitan covers says he needs sexual electricity flowing between himself and his subject to make a beautiful photo.

"You have to break down all the insecurities a woman may feel. You have to make her feel good," said Scavullo behind his HasselBlad camera, murmuring, "beautiful, beautiful" to a seductively-posturing model.

Scavullo's studio is papered with his magazine cover photos as well as his huge black and white shots of Jackie Mineff, Janis Joplin, Gloria Steinem, Barbra Streisand, Kirk Douglas and Mick Jagger. He's also the photographer who shot Burt Reynolds in the raw, starting the rage for nude male centrefolds.

His talent with shutter and lens has elicited a stream of compliments from grateful subjects. Jacqueline Susann, calm, slightly gentle man of 46, photo by Hollywood's image of the lady killer—enjoys talking about the nudes.

He says TV personality Barbara Walters said she was so happy to have been shot. Dr. Joyce Brothers, psychological advice and columnist, told him she'd never looked so good, even when she was pregnant. Actresses Judy Collins, in appreciation for her current photograph, said she was afraid of roses to "an extreme phallic-symbol" and actress Kirk Douglas and Mick Jagger, like also the photographer who shot Burt Reynolds.

"It's just a passion for my work," Scavullo says. "I love people and get turned on by looking at them through my camera. I like women to look their best. And I try to take pictures of what I think they should look like."

For a photo session, he provides the makeup, the hairdo and the latest clothes. He's like retouching the person instead of the photo—though he does a lot of that, too.

A talented trio hired by Scavullo went to work on the makeup, hair, bikinis and clothes of Martha Mitchell, ex-wife of former U.S. Attorney General John Mitchell. In Scavullo's photo for the cover of New York Magazine, she looked like a sultry, young Lana Turner.

When people complimented her, Mrs. Mitchell's reaction, according to Scavullo, was: "What's all the fuss about? I've always been a very beautiful woman."

Scavullo changed actress Angie Dickinson's image for her cover.

"I slicked her hair back, took away false lashes and lashes, used very subtle makeup and dressed her in white. That's the way she should look," he said.

Scavullo has sent stars such as Lorna Luft to his skin doctor for treatment and is constantly amazed at what "perfect complexions some celebrities have."

Mrs. Luft, a pretty redhead, says of Scavullo: "I had to spend a whole afternoon just talking to Barbra Streisand. But Raquel Welch never wasted a minute around me, and I don't think I ever photographed her unscrubbed."

But even mere mortals—if they have the money—can get snappy passport photos by Scavullo. He has fee is $2.00 for a half-day sitting, plus $75 an hour each for the makeup, hair and clothes beautifiers.

Ann Landers

Husband Dies—But Not Alone

Dear Ann Landers: About three months ago my husband was killed in a terrible accident. The car went over a steep incline and caught fire. That was bad enough, but when the police came to my home to tell me what had happened, they informed me in the presence of my three children (ages 14, 12 and 12) that their father was not alone. With him was an 18-year-old girl who worked in the same office.

I was not aware that he was seeing anyone, and I still have no proof that he was unfaithful. The accident occurred at 5 p.m. and he usually came home about 6:45.

Many friends have asked me questions about "the young woman." I don't know what to say to them. Their inquiries are very painful since I know what they are thinking.

Losing a wonderful mate after 20 years of marriage was a cruel blow, but the added grief because of the circumstances makes the sorrow almost unbearable. I'm at a complete loss to explain the young girl to my children and to friends and relatives! — Heartsick and Alone

Dear Friend: Thousands of married men give office colleagues a lift to and from work every day. Why do you feel this act of friendship needs defending?

Those who question you about the young passenger are not your friends. They are inveterate clods and gossip-mongers. I would not dignify their inquiries by offering any information. As for your children the simple explanation that Dad was giving the girl a ride home from the office should be sufficient.

Dear Ann Landers: I am a girl 14 who does babysitting. I have been warned against letting strangers who telephone the family in and at home. What should I say if the person who calls is a relative?

Several girls who babysit would like an answer to this question also. Thanks bunch. — Need to Know

Dear Need: Never take a chance. Say to whomever calls: "I'm sorry but Mr. or Mrs. So-And-So is busy and unable to come to the phone. Please leave your name and number and I will ask him (or her) to return your call."

Beauty Care—a Must for Models

TORONTO (CP) — There are few moments in the life of a top fashion model when she isn't aware of the state of her make-up, her skin, her hair, or forgets to stand or sit composed.

So says Yanka VanderKolk, one of Canada's top models who works in Toronto.

She is a driver, never satisfied, always working.

"I know my own weaknesses very well," she said. "I can wear anything but it has to be a valid thing in my own head. You have to have instinct for movement and fluidity and shape."

No girl turns up at a fashion show and refuses to wear the clothes.

"But you develop a knack for choosing what looks best to your build, and it is in the client's interest for you to look your best. That's what they are paying you for."

To cover high fashion models earn as much as $45 an hour, but rarely make more than $15,000 a year. Yet they are paid to trade their fives—as they say—for anybody else's.

With their images in newspapers, magazines and on television models are seen as the ultimate in beauty. A model who are not to be talked to, who are not to be approached.

Many make disastrous marriages: to the newly-rich who want to wear them as gain at the rise and fall of successes, to reformers who impose gingham aprons on their wives who see them as easy marks for an ill-matched set of insecurities," she said.

Recently he "thoroughly" enjoyed the Electric Exhibition at the K-W Art Gallery, his mother says.

"The women's committee of the K-W Art Gallery was the first organization I joined when I arrived in Waterloo. The gallery has delightful and important exhibitions and is well-worth supporting."

Mrs. Theobald also belongs to the Art Gallery of Ontario in Toronto and Women's Place, Waterloo.

"I firmly believe that if a man can continue his life work after marriage, so can a woman, with certain modifications when rearing a family."

But before embarking on community work on a career, it's important to have tranquillity and serenity in the home."

Beauty Care—a Must for Models

state of her skin every day and if she is tired or has blemishes she gives herself a pep talk.

"I clean my face with cleanser, maybe three times a day, make up my face, and I shower night and morning. Once a week or so I might spend an hour soaking in a bath with bath oil," she said.

Yanka married young and still is married to the father of her three children. She lives with them in Toronto's old chic apartment on the lake Ontario front.

On summer weekends on the family boat, Yanka leaves off her makeup and just washes and blow dries her hair.

"But I wouldn't slip around in a housecoat either," she said.

Jean Macdonald is a model who buzzes five jobs, runs a house with two cats and a dog, mothers four-year-old twins and consults about home-almost daily with her formerly-married mother.

She started modelling when she was 18 and was top model when she married "my very wealthy man." But life in the 16 room house was proved to be the gentleman when you had a live-in couple. I was put down when I wanted to work and didn't need the money. It wasn't for me," she said.

Now she is a modest-bungalow where she pauses between modelling, directing a modelling school, teaching at a community college, being a representative for a cosmetic house and running her own business.

Jean said she has lots of friends but not as many as before.

"At one time I had 46 pairs of shoes, now I have 1 has a lot less. A model has to be ahead, not just with it, otherwise you look shabby and the clients say 'maybe she's not doing as well anyone' and that's bad business," she said.

Up to two years ago, Jean figures top models made $15,000 a year. "Maybe that's now the average is about right.

"There aren't as many shows, or as much photography. Top models make about a third of the $30,000 to $40,000 a year they made a few years ago. Now the average is about $10,000.

"I don't care if I work Saturday night until 2 a.m. and I'm back at my desk at 9. I love it, and when you love it, you can't stop," she said.

with
LANA ROBINSON

(. . . an advertising feature designed to keep you better informed of what's new around town.)

Today is the last time I will write this column. Today I've enjoyed doing it and I hope you have enjoyed reading it.

Our Man Murray

I just had to begin this column with a tribute to our guru of Front St., Murray Atkinson ofMurray's Food Market. Murray has been in this column since it started and I remember he has never been dull. Every week, when I would commence my calls to my contacts, I would start with everybody, "Have you heard what Murray might want to say. Here are some of the highlights of Murray's last advertisement for his anniversary (he enjoys! Remember Murray's successful campaign to beat the senior citizens with their cost of living increase? Well the time Murray gave her Murray's first anniversary sale? I remember these things, he refuses to forget anything he has ever learned! I remember these things, and the fun I had writing about them. I also will remember Murray as a credit to the business and citizen community of this city.

True To Their Word

Last week I told you that I was going to go to Gibbs and Son, 27 Albion St., and get myself a reconditioned vacuum for the price. I went and I did! And I defy any of you to tell me I didn't get a vacuum that had cost $89 new. It was a pleasure to clean my cottage, knowing I had the great help of my Protector-Lewyt vacuum. Gibbs and Son have been selling for five months about the value of their reconditioned vacuums; the problem was their keeping in stock with the demand. But they assure me that this time they have a fair stock around. When they told me, I believed them; I wouldn't have passed it on to you, if I hadn't! But NOW I KNOW! And you will too. For a new vacuum, a reconditioned one, or having your old one put back in like-new operating order, call Gibbs and Son at 969-5284.

If Not Now, Later

Highland Construction's Home Improvement Course, 257 North Front St., is a great place to begin to think of helping you with the home improvements will eventually do. It is a great place to go and visit to get ideas and suggestions. There is no better place, as a matter of fact, to see quality kitchen cupboards that you can examine at close range. Highland's prices are the cutrageous sayy they will For rec room or bathroom renovations Highland has everything in ceramic tile, tile ceilings and that great bathroom redecorator, Marble Ore, which makes your bathroom look like a million dollars without the lost and mess of tiles. Highland is also a source for hardy and enduring vinyl siding. Or so you can see the Home Improvement Centre is well-named. And you're well advised to remember that.

A Great Place To Go

One of the treats of the last few months in this column has been the accumulating with the Cameron Gallery,-1½ miles west of Bedlington on the Bedlington Rd. The Cameron Gallery features the work of three Cameronns — Duncan, her husband Alan and their daughter Jennifer Cameron Finnigan, who is a potter as well as a painter. Oils, watercolors, pen and ink drawings, prints, stoneware,c pottery — you have from all this to choose, when you like yourself and your guests to the Cameron Gallery. As a wedding gift, a retirement present, a gift of remembrance for someone who has everything, you really couldn't give anything better, or more appreciated than a Cameron gift. And I mean that.

Always Something Special

Tuesday night was a special night for me, some sadness, some gladness. I was delivering my last "Tuesday Around The Town" column and that was rather a sad thing. But also, some very special people came to visit and that was the gladness part. So, what did we do to counter my dichotomy of mood? We went to the Terrace Dining Room of the Pine Seasons and just chatted. Chatsandland. We listened to the music, absorbed the atmosphere, felt spoiled by all the attention the waiters and waitresses went down to the Mad Mechanic afterwards and watched the live entertainment and the dancing. I wasn't sad any longer! We're very lucky to have such a place as the Pine Seasons around to help us out in times like these — or just any time when you feel like good food well-served. Keep it in mind, no matter what your mood.

Time For A Privilege To Talk About

There's a problem in marketing this kind of column, one which I have been fortunate enough to avoid. That's the problem of telling you about something I really didn't believe in. The greatest strength of this column has been, from my point of view, at any rate, that I have had to tell you about only those things I wouldn't buy or investmyself. And Jean Smith's West Wind Boutique is a place I really can talk about. I can be a sheer delight to write about. I like good clothes and I like good things, period. If Jean's West Wind carries, and I'm sure they carry, what I like to Jean's, Her gift boutique has unusual items from all over the world, reasonably priced, all the more reasonable when she's have you selling, swimming, running, shopping, or just plain loafing around in her lovely, lovely, and her import Room! Well, you'll just have to see it for yourselves!

Something I've Learned About

Moira-Schumacher has been in this column for a whole year too. And I'll tell you that I've learned a great deal from their support and confidence. You've read about the water softening and the Kenmore Sales of the Kenmore Water Softener, you've read about the air-conditioning systems of Moira-Schumacher and the fire detection systems of Moira-Schumacher and Moira-Schumacher is another local business citizen which is really doing its job in the community. I know that I have learned a great deal. I'm quite a while Jim was very seriously ill, but I received the maximum of cooperation from Moira-Schumacher, and I'll never forget it. I'll tell them. Dealing with a reputable company such as Moira-Schumacher will say a lot about you too.

Easy To Find

I was again tempted to use my sometimes repeated "Holiday With Holiday" headline one more time. I was really proud of that headline when I first thought of it and I'm sure that column which talked about Holiday Car and Truck Rentals, 11 West Moira St. in Trenton, I'm sure that column was getting tired. Since it was my last column, But you may well have need of Holiday's help in the future, or any time when getting around at your home is a substitute-car, or additional car situation. All you have to do is call 392-2931 and you will have access to the fleet of Chrysler products maintained by Holiday. Holiday is an all-Canadian owned and operated firm, and is providing the best service in this area that is possibly can. And it's not hard to find. Just look for the sign near the corner of West Moira and North Front. And you shouldn't miss it either!

Turning On The Lights

If you're not happy with what happens when you turn on the lights at your house, you should go and see the selection of every kind of Bulbs at Rudd Electric's Consumer Centre, 281 Coleman St. But they can make a lot of other improvements in your home, or life too. Rudd will install a complete home-kitchen-cooking unit method which really brings cooking into the 21st century, home vacuum systems, portable heating systems for cottage or recreation vehicle, and a complete line of pots and whole bunch of surprises. And that's just what I've discovered in new products since I last talked with my conversation-friend past six months with Ruddy. They can light up your home with some great ideas.

Going Great Guns

ServiceMaster, an internationally-known cleaning company which is represented in Trenton by Herb Tech and Jim Tech is another original member of this column Last year, at this time. We feel we have grown together. Herb and Jim have moved in at the rear of 178 Pinnacle St. Since that move, the ServiceMaster service has expanded considerably. Herb and Jim room and the facilities in which to expand. ServiceMaster can now really provide a service to domestic cleaning services that you'll just call 967-1872 ServiceMasters says of itself, that it's a dynamic company, and it is. It can also be used to clean up facilities for commercial or domestic fire disasters. If you have cleaning needs, large or small, ServiceMaster can do them; they're the experts!

The Place For Glass and Mirror

Believeview Glass and Mirror, 11 Pinnacle St., is another member of this column which has been with us for the whole year. And so it's one I've got to know quite well. As its name implies, Believeview is in business in two product areas: glass and mirror. And this means aluminum and steel storm doors and windows. The invention of aluminum windows and screen has been one of the greatest boons to home-owners, and if there is such a thing as a Home-Improvement Hall of Fame, then I hope that aluminum home products get their due. And if you're one of those people who is still poting on and taking off storm windows, then don't you think you really should get in this modern civilization and call Believeview Glass and Mirror? I do. Or if you're redecorating, don't forget what mirror can do. And don't forget Believeview Glass and Mirror. I won't.

Bye.

Sharon Theobold and her five-year old son Peter of Ayr are at work in a newsletter, while husband, William, and daughter Amanda, occupy themselves with a bedtime story in their Kitchener home. Mrs.Theobold, who is active in many facets of the art field, says, "that people should buy what they like in a painting but it should be an original." (CP Photo)

The Experts Say

Paintings Never Wear Out, And May Double in Value

WATERLOO, Ont. (CP) — Some people spend thousands of dollars for rugs but hesitate to spend $1,000 for an original painting.

"Rugs wear out. A painting doesn't," says art gallery owner Sharon Theobald of Waterloo and Brighton, Mass. "Some works of art increase ec double in price.

Mrs. Theobald, director of a summer art gallery in Maine, feels strongly "that people should buy what they like in a painting—it should be an original."

"Years ago, art was reserved for museums, art galleries and the upper class. I don't feel it is that way today. Original art paintings are affordable to the average person.

"There's no profit and little pleasure in a reproduced copy from copy," says Mrs. Theobald, whose husband is chairman of the department of recreation at University of Waterloo.

Art has long been the centre of the William Theobalds' lives. They have been acquiring art work since their marriage 12 years ago. The growth of their own collection is what led them to open a summer art gallery.

When the family moved from New York last year, Mrs. Theobald "agonized" whether to give up the art gallery. "It had been such a part of my life for five years. I found I needed it," says the mother of two, five-year-old Greeg and Amanda, 2½.

"My own strong hands did much of the physical work in converting the 1820 carriage house to an art gallery."

This was its second conversion. Originally, it had been the first location of the town newspaper.

The contemporary summer art gallery holds a collection of paintings, water colors, sculpture, lithographs, etchings in copper and zinc, and photographs.

Mrs. Theobald says she spends a busy three months at the gallery. "The children and I leave early in June and my husband joins us in August."

Dr. Theobald is a fellow of two International Appraisal Societies, the American Society and the International Society of Appraisers. His specialty is appraising contemporary fine art for estates and individuals.

"Many people assume I'm an artist because I'm director of an art gallery," laughs Mrs. Theobald, who holds a master's degree in English from Hofstra University, Hempstead, N.Y.

"I'd say I'm a competent mobile relations manager for artists. The only way an artist can continue painting is if his paintings are sold. I communicate their ideas through my words. I buy them painting time.

This year she has been busy preparing for two major exhibitions at the Brighton art gallery. The Skowhegan School of Art and painting of New York City and Skowhegan, Me., will lend works of art from its collection for the July 4-25 presentation.

An invitation show, Women in Art, Aug. 1-21, will show the work of Canadian and Canadian women painters, printmakers, sculptors and photographers.

"We thought this would be appropriate for International Women's Year," Mrs. Theobald explains.

Mrs. Theobald has a deep interest in encouraging Canadian art collectors and likes to share her knowledge with them.

An expert in framing pictures, she advises that framing is absolutely critical in care and preservation of works of art as well as adding to their beauty. Proper lighting adds to the decor and highlights paintings.

Some advice she gives is to "adapt your home to accommodation—to the work of art at hand.

"Today's look is one large room with partitions rather than a grouping," she says.

Mrs. Theobald says prospective buyers should visit museums and art galleries—art is in the seeing, she emphasizes.

The Theobald home reflects this with immaculate pieces of valuable art and a blending to create a spacious comfortable home.

And five-year-old Greeg's work has its place of honor. His art gallery is a door in the spacious kitchen where the uncurtained plant-filled windows "bring the outdoors in."

Greeg's art immersion began at the rice age of eight weeks when he was hackpacked to the Museum of Modern Art in New York. Recently he "thoroughly" enjoyed the Electric Exhibition at the K-W Art Gallery, his mother says.

"The women's committee of the K-W Art Gallery was the first organization I joined when I arrived in Waterloo. The gallery has delightful and important exhibitions and is well-worth supporting."

Mrs. Theobald also belongs to the Art Gallery of Ontario in Toronto and Women's Place, Waterloo.

"I firmly believe that if a man can continue his life work after marriage, so can a woman, with certain modifications when rearing a family."

But before embarking on community work or a career, it's important to have tranquillity and serenity in the home."

Irvine Promises Sewer Tax Relief for Hillcrest Ratepayers

By HARRY MULHALL
Staff Reporter

Hillcrest homebuilder's high-payment protests over new city services has reached the Ontario government's ministerial level.

Housing Minister Donald Irvine late Thursday followed up on half submissions with an on-the-spot survey of the northend suburb, a centre of discontent since property owners discovered the cost of sanitary sewers had sent tax bills rocketing.

Immediately after, Mr. Irvine indicated he would consider action on these fronts:

(1) Inform the environment ministry about the possibility of grants and loans in an attempt to ease the high local improvement costs blosting Hillcrest tax bills where sewers have now been installed.

(2) Consider, possibly prompting housing starts in the neighborhood, through provincial programs. This not only would provide needed housing for the city: It would eventually decrease the environmental improvement costs since there would be more homeowners to share the expense of service installations.

(3) Promote wider use of the province's home renewal program (already under which the city administers provincial loans and grants. This would help Hillcrest homebuyers with installation of domestic facilities using the county sewer services.

Mr. Irvine described the talks — and tour — as exploratory.

But he hoped to initiate action in a "positive way" and indicated answers should be forthcoming "within two weeks at most at the latest. I'm concerned."

"I came down with the idea of trying to resolve a difficult situation. And I hope I'm leaving the impression in the area that the situation is not one that cannot be resolved.

But Ken Brooks, president of Hillcrest Ratepayers Association (formed to urge council two weeks ago precipitated the ministerial visit), indicated his group wants solutions "now."

"We don't want to get snowballed up here," he told. "We don't want this issue to prolong until after the next provincial election (expected in fall). We want some action. These people here need financial assistance and we can't let things delay for long."

Mr. Brooks joined Mayor Reuben Jeffrey and city manager William Purcell at the city-hall meeting scheduled after it was discovered Mr. Irvine was passing through the Belleville area.

Mayor Jeffrey said a major thrust of the city's appeal on behalf of Hillcrest was that subsidies should be sought from the environment ministry.

A brief prepared by the city manager noted the disparity in local improvement charges by that ministry proposed for an adjacent sector of Thurlow Township when sewer and water improvements are extended there at about $130 for a frontage.

Hillcrest's problem to now has been large urban frontages — a singularity dated from its 1959 annexation as a rural suburb into the city. Shortly after, residential development was frozen — a restriction just relaxed — and local improvement charges amounted slightly in excess of $17 a frontage foot. In some cases this has almost doubled, tripled some tax bills.

Mayor Jeffrey said it was emphasized to Mr. Irvine that it "seems unfair" that Hillcrest, directly south of Thurlow across Highway 401 should be assessed so heavily because it now was a city street.

Full documentation on the issue will now be forwarded the minister's office, she said, extension costs.

But his following inspection of Hillcrest — with its estate lots — also obviously caught Mr. Irvine's attention as potential for new housing development.

He said he would examine the possibilities of arranging development in that area through the Ontario Housing Action Plan (OHAP). Under OHAP the province makes loans to developers to build homes for families with incomes from $11,000 — $28,000 with preferred interest rate.

It will possible also OHAP may provide incentives — free loans to the city for 15 years to finance sewer and water extensions, thus reducing staff-lation costs.

At one point, Mr. Brooks claimed the minister told him "I didn't realize areas like this exist in Belleville." But Brooks said he took the comment as reference to housing developments in that area in the city, which underdeveloped area since annexation in 1961.

Water Shortage Brings Short-term Measures

By COLIN BRUCE
Staff Reporter

Short term solutions to mounting water shortage problems were all Noramco Corp. offered residents of Quinte Heights subdivision Thursday, say spokesman for the province's ministry of the environment.

Historically, the 55-home subdivision near Bayside Secondary School has had summer water shortage problems. The issue came to a head this week at Sidney Township council when a group of residents demanded action.

Residents claimed that during the past week there had been no water pressure leaving toilets, showers and most taps inoperative. The township responded by trucking water to subdivision wells.

Thursday, officials of the ministry, the township, Noramco and a group of residents met to determine who is responsible for the water and what should be done.

Noramco Corp. general manager H.R. Ledingham said: "We don't guarantee to supply water for life in unlimited quantities to the subdivision."

He said other wells on the property have water but that because of high costs of connecting them to the system, "we have no intention of paying for the hookup."

As an alternative to permanent hook up Mr. Ledingham said his firm will install a two-inch plastic pipe to connect the existing well to the unused wells. 1,200 feet away if residents are prepared to obtain and operate a gasoline pump. In this fashion, system wells could be re-charged faster through the use of the more remote wells.

In addition, Mr. Ledingham — at the request of the ministry — said he will have specialists re adjust the mechanical aspects of the system to maximize pressure.

Lavern Hatcher, spokesman for the residents, said following a brief recess in the proceedings: "We will hold a meeting to decide on initiation of a temporary pump and to consider further legal action." After the meeting Mr. Hatcher said legal advice may be sought to determine who is responsible for water delivery to the development.

Bob Watson engineer with the ministry of the environment, said at present the water supply is only a third of what it should be. He added "it does not present a health problem."

"The solutions proposed by Noramco won't solve the problem but they will help a bit," said Mr. Watson.

Fish Must Be Biting

Someone apparently couldn't wait to go fishing.

A Ontario spokesman said today R. J. Hodgkinson of 17 First St. here reported the theft of fishing poles, lures and tackle box from the rear of his hak-ton truck some time during the past two days.

Total value of the stolen items is about $100.

And in another incident involving vandalism, a West Bridge St. groceteria had a plate glass window valued at $75 broken at about 7 a.m. today.

Parker Charged With Rape

A 21-year-old Belleville man has been charged by city police with two counts of rape following an incident involving a 22-year-old Chatham woman late Thursday afternoon in a wooded area of the city.

A police spokesman identified the man as Lynn William Parker of 2304 West Moira St.. He was to appear before a bail hearing today at 1:30 p.m. at the county courthouse here.

The spokesman said the arrest was made by Constable Dave Leavey in a wooded area between Tracey St. and Bell Blvd.

He added that Constable Leavey w.s "on special detail in this area in plain clothes" when the incident occurred Wednesday in which an indecent act was performed by a male person.

The spokesman said the woman was treated at Belleville General Hospital.

Minister on Spot

Ontario Housing Minister Donald Irvine (right) took a tour of Hillcrest after city hall meeting over high cost of sanitary sewer installations in the north-end suburb. Ken Brooks, Hillcrest Ratepayers' Association president, who guided the minister around area, said he hopes problem can be resolved without too much delay.

Jewelry Stolen From Two Homes

City police are investigating the theft of $1,400 worth of valuables from two city homes Thursday.

A police spokesman said today Mrs. C. A. Haight of 77 Pine St. reported the theft of a white gold ring with seven diamonds, one loupe birthstone ring, one gold watch and chain and a gold wedding band and necklace from a dresser drawer in her bedroom. Total value is $700.

And in a similar incident, J. W. Sherry of 154 Queen St., advised police of the theft of a large antique, oval-shaped light brown necklace, ring and a diamond solitaire antique ring worth $700 plus other pieces of jewelry with no set value, also from a bedroom dresser drawer, the spokesman said.

Hasty Pee Battle Flag Now Decorates Lawn

A replica of the battle flag of the Hastings Prince Edward regiment that accompanied the unit into combat is now flying on a flagpole on the front lawn of the armory.

The smaller, original battle flag has been retired to the sergeant's mess where it will stay, only to be used at the unit fights again.

Effective July 1, Canada Day, the flag was raised in a short military ceremony with honor guard, said Chief Warrent Officer William Vallance.

"We decided to make use of the second flagpole in front of the armory," he said, the regimental flag was stolen several years ago.

The flags were being stolen so often special measures had to be taken to protect it, he said.

"People were taking flags during daylight so we had to raise the toggle holding the knot so it could not be reached by ladder," said Vallance.

"In addition we ran barbed wire around the bottom half of the pole to discourage people from climbing it."

Queen's Follows Loyalist Pet Ban

Queen's University in Kingston should have followed the lead of Loyalist College here.

Loyalist, since its inception in the mid-1960s has banned all animals from campus buildings except for those rabbits and guinea pigs in the early childhood education program which delight children and blind students' seeing-eye dogs.

Queen's just recently adopted the same policy — but only after fumigation of Theological Hall for fleas proved the last straw for university officials.

Gerald Christopher, Loyalist supervisor of plant responsible for maintenance and general upkeep, said Thursday, "we won't allow cats and dogs at all. If you allow them in a building like this, they run wild."

A formal notice has been issued at Queen's barring pets and citing health hazards of "excrement, bites and disease transmission through fleas."

Mr. Christopher said the Loyalist regulation is not posed. "It's a more or less unwritten law but it's a pretly well understood law."

He recalled when the college was under construction a cat which wandered around the site eventually found its way between the walls. "You can imagine the trouble we had getting it out."

Township Gets Grant

A $2,300 provincial grant has made it possible for Thurlow Township to have a summer recreational program this year.

Participation 75 will run Tuesdays and Thursday mornings 9 a.m. - 12 noon until August 21.

"Without the grant from the ministry of community and social services the program would not have been possible," says Kay Summers, member of the township recreational committee.

The program will be held at 14 sites throughout Thurlow Township including schools, playgrounds, churches and private homes.

Home at Last

Pam Murray, 14 of Centennial Secondary School, steps down train after a two-week visit with a Quebec family. The project, part of an exchange program sponsored by the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews, continues this week with 17 French-Canadian students visiting the Quinte area.

No End in Sight To Month-long Strike

There is still no end in sight to the strike that has crippled International Harvester for the past month.

The 220-member local of the International Union of Moulders and Allied Workers voted overwhelmingly for strike against the company June 13 in support of demands which centred on wages and cost of living clauses.

The union has demanded a 75 per cent increase in pay and unlimited cost of living benefits for both years of a two-year contract.

In return, the company's negotiating team offered a complete package including cost of living and wages that would give workers an increase of about 36 per cent.

Ray Ryan, chairman of the union negotiating committee said during an interview Wednesday: "There is nothing new at all."

Company president D. C. Boyd confirmed that negotiations had not been renewed and said, "The union left the negotiating table. We're waiting for them to come back with an offer.

"We're hoping to show some sense and accept this exceptional offer," said Mr. Boyd.

Mr. Ryan said spirits are "high" on the picket line and that an increasing number of workers have been part time jobs that are helping them through the labor action. In addition, Mr. Ryan said a number of staff are leaving the Coleman St. plant for good, after finding "better jobs".

Mr. Boyd said the company does not have extensive stockpiles of products to maintain deliveries to buyers and "that we're getting some cancellations".

Dog Attacks 11-year-old

PICTON — An 11-year-old Picton boy was admitted to Prince Edward County Memorial Hospital Thursday afternoon after he was attacked by a German shepherd while walking on Bay St.

Michael Lickers, 18 Ontario St., was bitten severely on the leg and numberous stitches were required to close the wounds.

Mr. George Wright of the Picton police department said the incident occurred on a Spring St., resident, is being held in quarantine.

Clinic Collects 375 Pints

Suddenly, Thursday made it a lucky 1975 could be a year of change.

Local Red Cross officials staged their summer clinic with crossed fingers.

They had visions of the mile was set for the clinic held at Centennial Secondary School.

By the time it closed officials counted 375 donors — not included 54 rejected for various reasons.

As a result donations for the year now stand at 2,001 units of blood — with one more clinic to go in October.

In 1974 the total blood donations was 1,856.

"It was wonderful for this time of year," enthused clinic chairman Merritt Hackett. "Particularly since blood transfusions are so badly needed this time of year."

Donors Respond

Red Cross blood clinic drew unexpectedly high response Thursday producing 375 units of blood — bolstering donations to date this year well over whole of 1974. Steady stream of donors at Centennial Secondary School included Judith Stakenvicius, of Belleville, here having blood sampled by Red Cross technician Anne Roberts.

Quebec Students Arrive in City

More than 50 people Thursday met the longest passenger train to go through Belleville ighii year.

Parents and friends of Quinte-area students who were returning to Belleville from Quebec with their hosts, were greeted by enthusiastic crowds.

Keith Allison, Rotary Club member and organizer of the two-week reciprocal visit by the French-Canadian students, accompanied by representatives of the Chamber of Commerce and Belleville Garden Club formally welcomed the group.

The Garden Club representative, Mrs. Gardiner, presented each of the visitors with a corsage. They also received a briefcase filled with information about Belleville from the chamber representative.

The students will be in the Quinte area for two weeks as part of an exchange program sponsored by the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews.

The two-week program will be highlighted by a meeting with Mayor Reuben Jeffrey at City Hall, July 14, and a patio swim barbecue on July 22.

Cattle Deaths Traced to Toxic Fluid Used as Cure

By HARRY MULHALL
Staff Reporter

Two months after a warning that Hastings-area farmers might unwittingly be in possession of a highly-toxic fluid, there have been no new discoveries of the poison, a provincial food and agriculture ministry spokesman says.

The warning was issued in early May after it was found a farmer's cattle had been poisoned by tri-cresyl phosphate.

The phosphate was contained in some waste oil and drums in a load designated for dumping by a Belleville chemical company more than a year ago. But the oil inadvertently got into farmers' possession and, without any of the parties involved suspecting it might contain the tri-cresyl phosphate, said a ministry veterinarian.

"It certainly was an accidental thing," said Dr. R. J. Julian, head of the ministry's veterinary services laboratory at Brighton.

As far as we know we have this thing cleared up," he said.

"But Saturday, "It should never have got out into the hands of people like that. . . People handling it didn't realize what it was."

Those who later came in possession of the fluid said it been using it for farmyard chores, such as machine lubrication, he indicated. One farmer was using it to burn brush. Some empty drums were found as far north as Westemkoon Lake.

But the phosphate's presence came to light after a Roslin area farmer rubbed the oil on cattle as a treatment for ringworm in February.

The farmer, in an interview with The Intelligencer asked that he remain anonymous, said a number of cattle had been poisoned in the same system by the phosphate.

He said he'd purchase the oil at a sale.

After the discovery, local ministry officials embarked on a search for any more oil or even empty drums that might contain the phosphate residue, said Dr. Julian.

"We checked everybody we found out had the stuff. We picked it up and it was properly disposed of."

The phosphate wasn't contained in Canada-made fluid used in Trans-Canada Pipeline pumping stations, he said. It was shipped by Imperial Bros. (Canada) Ltd. for reclaiming — a project a company spokesman said Dussek erased about three years ago.

The phosphate, if its presence had been realized should normally be disposed of at a provincial industrial incineration centre, said Dr. Julian.

Most of the waste oil and drums handled over by Dussek for disposal were "perfectly safe," he said. There was, however, an "occasional" barrel containing the toxic residue.

The stockpile of metal drums, some empty, some containing waste oil, was given over to McInroy and Maines Construction for disposal.

Gord McInroy, construction company president, said most of the drums were dumped at Belleville's White disposal site in Sidney Township.

Dr. Julian said cattle have been poisoned by the phosphate in other provinces and in the United States, while there have been instances where it was toxic to humans "in other countries."

Douglas Tupper, the ministry's agricultural representatives in Hastings, described the phosphate as "a pretty dangerous thing" which had killed many in Algeria some years ago when sold off in cooking oil.

"When we finally pinpointed it we got pretty concerned."

The poison caused brain, liver and kidney damage in the cattle. The meat had to be held in cold storage for several months until it was cleared for human consumption.

He believed the situation had been cleared up, but suggested any one with suspicions of containers or their contents should contact his office at 395-3383.

The warning issued by Dr. Julian in May gave the trade name of the hydraulic fluid as Fryquel. It added that anyone in possession of either full or empty drums marked with that label or the names of Dussek Bros., Acelleco Nalfenico or Fryquel Waste be reported to ministry officials at Stirling.

Up and Away For the Tigers

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Detroit. Tigers have certainly had their ups and downs this season. Right now, they're up.

The Tigers, who couldn't win a game for the longest time, now can't lose and Thursday night defeated Kansas City Royals 3-2 for their ninth consecutive American League baseball victory.

"There's really no answer for our slump and now our winning streak," said Detroit manager Ralph Houk. "We don't have been ball goes. We were playing real close ball games in the slump. We were in all the games but we couldn't get the hit at the right time."

Before the recent successes, the Tigers had suffered through losing streaks of four, six and five games.

In other American League games, Boston Red Sox nipped Texas Rangers 9-7, Minnesota Twins stopped New York Yankees 6-3, and Baltimore Orioles beat California Angels 7-3.

Vern Ruhle teamed with Bob Reynolds for an eight-hitter and Jason Thompson belted a home run to help the Tigers beat the Royals.

"Now our young pitchers are doing real well, like Ruhle and Hook and Coleman. Ruhle is a real fine pitcher. He's always got a winner. He's consistently around the plate."

Gail Cooper's run-scoring single in the bottom of the ninth offset Texas' three-run burst in the top of the inning and gave Boston its victory over the Rangers.

The Rangers had tied it 7-7 with two outs in the top of the ninth when Toby Harrah and Jim Spencer singled and a pair of Burroughs hit a foul-court pitch for Harrah. Cleveland, who was the left field wall for his 17th home run of the season.

Tony Oliva ripped four hits, one of them a home run, and triggered three rallies, leading Minnesota over New York. It was the 27th career four-hit game for the Minnesota veteran.

Oliva's big night extended his latest hitting streak to eight consecutive games.

Elrod Hendricks led Baltimore's extra-base hit assault with two doubles and a triple and Mike Cuellar scattered nine hits as the Orioles beat California. The Orioles blasted out nine extra base hits in their 14-hit blast. Brooks Robinson had two home runs—to helping Cuellar lift his record to 7-6.

Senior Baseball

Teams Are Falling By the Wayside

VANCOUVER (CP) — St. John's, Nfld., was the second team eliminated from the Canadian senior baseball championships, losing 1-0 Thursday to Vancouver All-Stars.

It was Vancouver's first victory of the double-knockout tournament and advanced the All-Stars to another game late Saturday against Saskatchewan.

The only run was scored in the first inning when second baseman Bert Haas of Vancouver doubled and scored on a single by first baseman Don Archer.

Right-hander Bill Bazaluk and relief Bob Bruce combined to pitch a five-hit shutout. Bazaluk struck out seven before being replaced by Elliott with two out in the bottom of the ninth inning.

Losing pitcher Bill Hudson of St. John's also gave up only five hits.

Montreal, representing Quebec, advanced by beating Nova Scotia 7-4. The loss eliminated the Halifax team which lost 12-2 to British Columbia Tuesday.

Gaetan Plouffe pitched the complete game for Quebec, despite giving up 14 Nova Scotia hits. Nova Scotia left 13 men on base.

Starter Bob Gillis was the losing pitcher.

Richard Milo hit a two-run triple for Quebec in the second inning and his single in the third drove in two more runs.

Vancouver All-Stars eliminated Regina Red Sox by defeating the Saskatchewan representatives 8-4. Vancouver had 19 hits off three Regina pitchers.

The winners were ahead 6-0 but Saskatchewan closed the gap with two-run rallies in the fifth and sixth innings. Vancouver went ahead 7-4 in the top of the seventh and Saskatchewan had a chance to get back in the game in the bottom of that inning when they loaded the bases with one out.

However, relief pitcher Brent Wagg struck out Jim Baga and got Bob Brown to ground out to end the inning and Saskatchewan's last threat.

Vancouver starter Gord Williams was the winning pitcher. Saskatchewan starter Gary Brandon took the loss.

Balint's Four-hitter Stops Toronto Team

ST. CATHARINES, Ont. (CP) — Dick Balint pitched a four-hitter Thursday as St. Catharines Mr. Aircoils defeated Toronto Globals 5-1 in an Ontario Football League game.

The St. Catharines right-hander struck out nine and walked two. The loser was John Young, who gave up seven hits and struck out three.

Toronto scored a run in the top of the first inning but St. Catharines tied the game in the bottom of the first and added single runs in the second and the seventh.

Barry Robertson homered for the winners and Don Hill debranski had a triple and a single. Lee Gould doubled for Toronto.

Munros And Chiefs Score

Brady Bryan scored six goals, leading Peterborough Gray-Munros to a 11-12 victory over Rexdale Warriors in Ontario Lacrosse Association Junior A action Thursday.

In the only other league game, Mississauga Chiefs downed Oshawa Gaels 20-17.

At Peterborough, Steve Byers, Dan Green, Mark Vitarelli, Bob Wasson and Dave Plunkett with two goals each, Greg Lustig, Paul Evans, Ken Byers, Dan Eastman and Moe Jodoin added one each.

Rexdale's top scorers were Steve Self and Brian Legree with three goals each. Dave Huntley banged in two more and Wally Cheetz, Bill Bolibe, Dan Sabadash and Mike Fisher rounded out the scoring.

The Grays led 8-4 at the end of the first period and 13-8 at the end of the second.

In Oshawa, "George Chandler Mississauga with four goals and three assists as the Chiefs took period leads of 7-2 and 15-6.

Other games scheduled for Thursday—London at Newmarket and Lakeshore at Burlington—were rained out. No reached-sued dates were set.

HANK AARON

Dark Adds 12

NEW YOR (KAP) — Hank Aaron heads a list of 12 players selected Thursday by manager Alvin Dark of Oakland A's to complete the American League all-stars team for next Tuesday night's baseball game against the National League in Milwaukee's County Stadium.

Aaron, the baseball all-time home run leader, was named to his 25th all-star squad that he first one for the AL. He played in 23 games for the National League and was traded to the Milwaukee Brewers by Atlanta Braves last winter after shattering Babe Ruth's 714 home run record last season.

If he plays Tuesday night, he will tie the record of 24 all-star appearances shared by Willie Mays and Stan Musial.

Aaron and first baseman George Scott will represent the Brewers. Boston Red Sox's bench will include Boston teammates Carl Yastrzemski and Fred Lynn; California third baseman Dave Chalk; shortstop Bucky Dent and second baseman Jorge Orta of Chicago White Sox; outfielder George Hendrick of Cleveland; Detroit catcher Bill Freehan; outfielder Hal McRae of Kansas City; Oakland outfielder Claudell Washington; and Texas first baseman Mike Hargrove.

They will back up a starting lineup dominated by Oakland and New York Yankees, who took seven of the eight starting berths. Minnesota second baseman Rod Carew, who led all players with 3,168,616 votes in fan balloting, is the only starter not Oakland or New York.

Other starters are outfielder Bobby Bonds, catcher Thurman Munson and third baseman Graig Nettles of the Yankees, all named to the starting team for the first time, and Oakland first baseman Gene Tenace, shortstop Bert Campaneris and outfielders Joe Rudi and Reggie Jackson.

Dark previously had named an eight-man pitching staff composed of Catfish Hunter of the Yankees, Vida Blue and Rollie Fingers of Oakland, Steve Busby of Kansas City, Jim Palmer of Baltimore, Ken Ryan of California and Rich Gossage and Terry Forster of White Sox.

The only rookie named to the AL team was Lynn, who ai- [illegible] 1,413,964 write-in votes in the fan balloting.

3 Phils Selected

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Three Philadelphia Phils, two Pittsburgh Pirates and one player from each of six other National League clubs were chosen today by manager Walt Alston as National League all-star reserves for Tuesday's game against the American League all-stars at Milwaukee.

Philadelphia selections were outfielder Greg Luzinski, the league leader in home runs and runs batted in and the second base-shortstop combination of Dave Cash and Larry Bowa.

Manny Sanguillen was named backup for starting catcher Johnny Bench of Cincinnati and outfielder Al Oliver is Pittsburgh's other reserve player.

The remaining six reserves are Tony Perez, Cincinnati, and first base; Bill Madlock, Chicago, third base; and outfielders Reggie Smith of St. Louis, Bobby Murcer of San Francisco and Gary Carter of Montreal.

In addition to Bench, the Reds have second baseman Joe Morgan, shortstop Dave Concepcion and outfielder Pete Rose in a starting lineup that includes St. Louis outfielder Lou Brock and three of Atlanta's Los Angeles Dodgers.

Starters for the Dodgers, who also have three men on the nine-man pitching staff, are Steve Garvey at first, Ron Cey at third and Jimmy Wynn, outfield.

BREAKS RECORD

PARIS (AP) — Francie Larrieu of Los Angeles broke her own American record in the 1,500-metre run in a track meet in a Paris suburb Wednesday night with a time of 4:08.5, the nine's fastest previous time for the distance was 4:09.8.

Move Over, Joe Here's Willie

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

No offence, Joe DiMaggio, it was just another night's work for Willie Stargell.

"Milestones are to be enjoyed once your career is over," Stargell said after his 19th home run moved him with DiMaggio for 34th place on the all-time major league list and secured the Pittsburgh Pirates' 6-1 victory over Los Angeles Dodgers in a National League baseball game Wednesday night.

In the only other game in the National League, Chicago Cubs defeated San Diego Padres 3-1. The Montreal-Atlanta game was postponed by rain.

"I hope I've got two games tomorrow and that milestones aren't going to be much help," Stargell said after the Pirate victory.

"Now you're playing, you just have to grind it out," he added.

Stargell ground it out against the Dodgers with a run-scoring single that broke a 1-1 tie and a two-run insurance homer off Dodger reliever Mike Marshall. The victory was the 18th in 19 games for the Pirates, who moved to games ahead of the Philadelphia Phillies in the National League East. The Dodgers dropped to games behind the first-place Cincinnati Reds in the West.

Ray Burris stopped San Diego on eight hits and Chicago covered a pair of unearned runs in the second inning en route to victory over the Padres.

With two out in the second inning, Manny Trillo walked and Burris's wheel doubled. Burris then grounded to shortstop Enos Cabell, who threw wild past first as both runners scored.

Burris had a three-hit shutout until there were two out in the sixth inning. Bobby Tolan singled and Dave Winfield followed with a run-scoring double.

Robinson Rates The Men in Blue

OAKLAND (AP) — Manager Frank Robinson of Cleveland Indians, who recently said some American League umpires are prejudiced against the Indians, says he feels the majority are not.

He listed as "not bad" umpires Gerry Barnett, Nestor Chylak, Bill Deegan, Jim Evans, Jim Evans, Richard Cargia and Bill Kunkel.

"Jim McKean can be good but he's jin with a bad crew. Ron Luciano has good but the rest of his crew holds him back. Joe Brinkman, Steve Palermo is good but his temper gets him in trouble.

"The other 14 are Merle Anderson, Ron Luciano, Jim Honochick, Terry Cooney, Lou DiMuro, Art Frantz, Russ Brock and Steve Baller, Don Lucianc George Maloney, Larry McCoy, Al Fasnacht, Morgenweck, Jerry Neudecker and Armando Rodriguez.

CLEVELAND (AP) — Phil Seghi, general manager of Cleveland Indians, says there is cause for alarm in the way American League baseball umpires have been treating manager Frank Robinson.

"I have heard some plays recently that Frank has come out to argue and the umpires have had every right to question the rules and the umpires have been very brief with him," Seghi said Thursday.

"I have seen many managers give many more heated arguments than Frank has given, yet there doesn't seem to be the attention put on the other reactions toward the others that there is to Frank."

He would not mention specific umpires.

Seghi said he would not file a formal complaint with league officials but would talk with president Lee MacPhail and director of umpires Dick Butler during the all-star break.

Robinson, baseball's first black manager, said Tuesday that umpires were discriminating against him.

"I'm not saying I think they are prejudiced because I'm black," he said. "But I am saying they are so aware of my situation with all the hoopla that goes with it, that they are determined to not let me get away with anything; to keep me in my place."

ENTRY REJECTED

LONDON (Reuter) — The Royal Ocean Racing Club announced Thursday that Moxie's entry for the admiral's cup, regarded as the world championship of ocean yacht racing, has been rejected. It said the Cup's management committee was not satisfied the entry was truly representative.

Some BQSA Entries Letting Others Down

All of a sudden, the Bay of Quinte Soccer Association has member teams developing nasty habits.

Trouble is, the negligence of some clubs is hurting the others.

I'm referring of course, to the unwillingness of association teams Canadian Forces Base Trenton, Waterworth, Brighton and Cobourg to call in at least the scores from their league games.

I said it before and it bears repeating.

It's got to be 100 percent cooperation or this department doesn't have the time to bother with any league.

In other seasons, it was no trick to check up on teams who neglected to report games. A call to association president Peter Crowle usually produced the desired results.

Since Peter refereed many of the games, he knew the score at least and more often than not, could fill a fellow in on the details.

Such is not the case this time around. And it certainly is not Crowle's fault.

It's tough on people like Kevin Kirby (Belleville Olympics); Dudley Hiller (Belleville Parsons); Joe Iasenza (Italo Canadians); Quinte Helenic and Citizens Finance of Trenton who were always willing to get us the results.

They have a legitimate beef.

But it's not with me and I hope they realize that.

Some individuals are trying their best to bring the offending clubs around to my way of thinking. I hope their efforts are not in vain.

The soccer group deserves coverage.

Perhaps within a few days things will be back to normal and regular BQSA reports and standings will be a feature of the sports pages.

SLICES — Belleville will be represented in the Royal Canadian Legion peewee baseball playoffs at the District level when the defending champion Peterborough squad plays host to the event, Saturday.

No word on who Belleville will meet but it could be Trenton Branch 110 is another entry.

Fred Bedard believes in giving credit where it is due When a co-worker at Wilson Sports Equipment scored a hole in one Wednesday, Fred took it on himself to report the feat when his friend appeared hesitant to do so.

Bruce Symons of Belleville scored the ace on the 163-yard, par 3 second hole at Oak Hills Golf Course. He used an eight iron.

Golfing with Bruce were Bob Bailey and Ray Ryan.

Lending assistance to the Quinte Auto Sport Club's ambitious dusk 'til dawn rally, Saturday night and Sunday, will be members of the Tri-County Radio Club who will be manning the check points.

First car out on the 195-mile jaunt will leave Quinte Mall at 10:01 p.m. Saturday.

Entry fee is $4 per car. Registrations will be taken from 8:30 - 9:30 p.m.

California has produced nearly three times as many National Baseball League players as its nearest rival, Texas. There are 40 Californians caroming around National League diamonds. Twenty - one players are from Texas.

Make it a point to take in that Sport Softball Tournament, Saturday. These little guys produce some entertaining action. Games are scheduled for Queen Victoria Public School, Queen Elizabeth Public School and Alemite Park.

Our own Belleville Kinsmen team will be aiming for a championship.

Opening games are set for 9 a.m. A full schedule appears in today's sports calendar.

Yardmen Midgets Are 4 - 3 Winners

The Belleville Yardmen Midgets had to work hard for their Prince Edward North Shore Softball League victory over Carrying Place, Thursday, scoring two runs in the bottom of the seventh to take the game 4-3.

In the other league game, Bayview Orchard won 7-0 over Consecon.

Danny Vance hurled the Yardmen victory, giving up eight hits he walked five and came up with 10 third strikes.

Chris Jeffery took the loss, giving up nine hits and a walk while gaining five strikeouts.

Scott Bowes had three singles for the winners while Marty Lowery had two safeties.

Dan Wannamaker singled three times for the losers, while Pat Irvine and Mike Irvine each had two safeties.

Don Bonter took the win for Bayview.

Bonter gave up four hits and two walks while striking out four batters in the shutout.

Wayne Clarke was the loser, giving up six hits and three walks while striking out three.

It was a team effort for Bayview, as the six hits were spread out among the team.

Black Diamond Squad On a Hitting Spree

Black Diamond went out to hit on Thursday night in the Belleville Industrial Softball League, and they met with success.

The Black Diamond squad cracked 18 hits off the Lenders to win 15-1.

Ron Andrews took the victory, giving up five hits and one walk while striking out three hitters.

The loss went to Wayne Marr, who walked four and gained no strikeouts.

eGne Francis had a single, a double and a triple for Black Diamond. Jack Francis had a single, two triples and cracked a homerun.

Bob Wilkes doubled for the losers.

The Pitching Staff

Bobby Turner, Allan Thompson and Angelo Lentini (left to right) will be sharing in pitching duties for Belleville Kinsmen, Saturday when Belleville plays host to 14-team McDonald's Squirt Softball Tournament. Action in the tournament starts at 9 a.m. Championship games are set for 6 p.m. and 7:30 p.m.

14 Squirt Teams Here Saturday

Kinsmen Tournament Hosts

Belleville's Kinsmen Squirts are getting in plenty of action while hosting for Saturday's annual Belleville Minor Softball Association McDonald's Tournament.

The club hasn't been blasting its opponents. In fact Kinsmen have dropped their last two outings. But that's what getting ready for an important tournament is all about. Obviously the emphasis is on preparation and not on making sure to post wins in practice games.

Playing in Marmora, Thursday, Kinsmen were edged 7-6 by Springbrook. Winning pitcher Gary Finch struck out 12. Angelo Lentini took the loss, fanning six.

Scott Terrion blasted a pair of home runs and supplied a single to the winners' attack. Lentini helped his own cause with three singles. John Ramsay whacked a Belleville homer and singled while Stephen Smith and Warren Cavalier each singled twice.

Earlier in the week, Kinsmen fell to Napanee Ryan's in another road game, 7-3.

Ramsay slammed a triple and Bobby Turner had a double in defeat. Tops for the winners was Mike Irvine with two singles.

Kevin MacDonald was the winning pitcher with nine strikeouts to his credit. Steve Thompson fanned eight while taking the loss.

Springbrook and Napanee are part of the 14-team tournament here Saturday.

Broadloom Ties Purinaettes 7 - 7

Belleville Broadloom and the Purinaettes played to a 7-7 tie, in Belleville and District Ladies Softball League on Thursday night.

Sue Fobert and Sandra Fleming pitched well and neither team could gain an edge.

In the other league game Belleville Yardmen Benefit Fund defeated Mobil Chemical 12-1.

Fleming allowed 11 hits for the Purinaettes, giving up a walk and striking out five batters.

Fobert gave up 14 hits and a walk while striking out one batter for Broadloom.

Chris Fox had two singles and a double for Broadloom. Pam Smith pounded a triple and a single, while Norma May contributed two singles to the offence.

For Madoc, Jane Bailey pounded a homer and a triple while Bonnie Jones tripled and Bonnie Thompson had two singles and a triple.

Sue Morton took an easy win for BYBF striking out nine Mobil batters in the 12-2 win.

She gave up just six hits in five innings. She walked none.

Sue Shannon and Aileen Barr shared the Mobil loss.

Sharon Alexander had a triple, a double and two singles in the victory, while Danna Preston tripled, doubled and singled.

Bantam Softball Team Records Two Victories

The Belleville Downtown Merchants slipped by Napanee 10-9 in the East Central Ontario Bantam Softball League, Thursday.

Rick Tripp came up with the victory, giving up 10 hits and two walks, while striking out four batters. He went all seven innings for Belleville.

Mike Martin took the loss, giving up 11 hits and three walks while striking out just one.

Andy Rosalt hit a homer and a single while driving in three Belleville runs.

Greg Mills hit a homer and single for the losers.

In previous league action Belleville defeated Picton 15-12, on the pitching talents of Ward Morison and Tripp.

Bob Hedge was Belleville's leader that game with a homer and three singles.

Sprackett Over Swan In Duel of Pitchers

Two of the top pitchers in the Quinte Baseball League met on Thursday night at the Alemite.

John Sprackett and Bob Swan, of the Ellis Juniors and Auger's Mens Wear, respectively, put on a good pitchers duel for fans.

When the smoke had cleared the Ellis Juniors came out ahead 1-0, although they had only two safeties off Swan.

The only run of the game came in the seventh inning when Sid Frenkel doubled and moved to third on a passed ball. Bruce Sutherland hit a towering sacrifice fly which scored Campbell.

In the other QPL game, Bardon Supplies defeated Devolin Motors 7-3.

Sprackett gave up just three hits for the Juniors, and walked one, he also struck out two batters. He depended mainly on just keeping the batters off balance for most of the game.

Giving up just two hits and a walk, Swan struck out nine junior batters.

Bob Campbell joined his brother Steve to account for the only two Junior hits. Steve had a double while Bob had a single.

All three Auger hits were singles, coming from Joe Theroux, Darryl Kramp and Jamie Hunter.

The second game was more of a hitters match.

Earl Foster threw the Bardon win, giving up five hits and no walks while sending six batters down on third strikes.

Don Holoway took the loss, giving up six of the runs on seven hits, one walk and one strikeout.

Larry Griffin came in for four innings of relief and gave up two hits and a walk, while blowing nine strikeouts by Devolin batters.

Ted Walbrook was tops at the plate for Bardons, with a single and a double, while Marv Stacey singled twice. Other hits were all singles from Ken Demille, Rob Walkwork, Warren Ostrander, Denis Neron and Carl Stacey.

Gary Goyer led the Devolin hitters, with a single and a triple, while John Burnside, Rick Rosebush and Gary Johnson singled.

Closing in on Record

Dave Cutler of Edmonton Eskimos is on the verge of being the most successful field goal kicker in the history of the Canadian Football League. Cutler, who booked 66 field goals in the last two seasons, needs only 24 to tie former Calgary Stampeder Larry Robinson's lifetime total of 179. (CP Photo)

Ho-hum! B. C. 4-0 Over Argos

Forbes' Trial Continues

Teams Go Nowhere on Greasy Turf

TORONTO (CP) — A second-quarter field goal from 26 yards by Eric Guthrie and a fourth-quarter single scored when another field goal try went wide provided all the scoring as British Columbia Lions shot out Toronto Argonauts 4-0 in the only Canadian Football League exhibition game Thursday night.

The game, played before 32,000 fans on a field made sticky by early-evening rain shower, was an exercise in futility for both sides as neither was able to move the ball as far as the opposing 30-yard line all night.

The closest the Lions came to touchdown was in the fourth quarter when Pete Liske, who played the entire game at quarterback, passed 34 yards to Randy Rogers at the Toronto 11, but after an incomplete pass, Liske was sacked at the 20 and Guthrie's wide field-goal attempt sailed to the dead-ball line for a single.

The Argos, who used rookie Rick Worley at quarterback in the first half and holdover Mike Rae in the second, threatened only once. Peter Muller caught a Rae pass in the fourth quarter and ran to the B.C. 11 before fumbling. Rocky Long recovered the ball in the air and returned it to the B.C. 38.

Zenon Andruszyshyn had three chances to put the Argos on the scoreboard, but was either wide or short on field goal attempts from 44, 47 and 40 yards. Guthrie missed on two of his three tries, one of which was deflected.

Andruszyshyn's inability to handle a high third-down snap in the second quarter set the stage for the Lions field goal. He picked the ball up and threw for a Toronto territory.

But Liske, after passing to Tony Moro for four yards and handing off on an 11-yard draw to Leo Harris which moved the ball to the 19, missed on two passes, and had to settle for Guthrie's field goal at 6:46.

Didn't See Blow Struck Explains Game Timekeeper

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (AP) — A penalty timekeeper testified Thursday that he heard Dave Forbes of Boston Bruins threaten to shove his hockey stick down the throat of former Minnesota North Stars player Henry Boucha.

On cross-examination, however, the official said he did not see Forbes strike Boucha with his stick during a National Hockey League game Jan. 4 in Bloomington, Minn.

Forbes, 26, is on trial in Hennepin County district court charged with aggravated assault with a dangerous weapon in the first U.S. prosecution of a professional athlete on a criminal charge for actions that occurred during a sports contest.

The first case of this kind occurred in Ottawa in 1979 when Ted Green, then a defenseman with the Bruins, was acquitted of a charge of common assault arising from an attack on Wayne Maki of St. Louis Blues during a National Hockey League exhibition game in that city on Sept. 21, 1969.

The penalty timekeeper, Donald W. Wheeler of Bloomington, said he heard Forbes threaten Boucha when the two were in the penalty box in the first period.

Wheeler, a stenographic pool reporter, said he heard Forbes tell Boucha: "I'm going to get you . . . not with my fists . . . I'm going to shove my stick down your throat."

He said he saw Forbes "make a jabbing motion with his hockey stick in the direction of Mr. Boucha's head."

On cross-examination by defence counsel Ron Meshbesher, Wheeler said he couldn't see whether Forbes's hockey stick struck Boucha during the jabbing fracas when the two returned to the ice.

He testified that he gave little thought to what Forbes yelled at Boucha in the penalty box because it wasn't a particularly unusual occurrence and because he was taking information from the officials so he could record the penalty time in his official book and on the scoreboard.

Boucha, 24, needed 30 stitches to close the wound near his eye and eventually had to undergo surgery to correct double vision. He missed several weeks of the season, and since has signed with the Minnesota Fighting Saints.

NHL Players' Association Backs Proposed Changes

TORONTO (CP) — The National Hockey League Players' Association has endorsed proposed rule changes that might speed up games and stiffen sanctions against violent participants.

In final final sessions between players' representatives and league owners Thursday, a recommendation was approved eliminating the position of team alternate captains.

If the NHL rules committee approves the recommendation, a player will be allowed to dispute a game call only on the invitation of the referee, and that invitation will be extended only to the team captain.

Players' representatives also approved a recommendation of immediate and mandatory suspension of any player penalized for attempting to injure another player, pending the usual league inquiry.

Also approved was a decision to trim training camp dates in the 1976-77 season to 21 days from the present 23. Exhibition games will be cut to eight from the present 10.

In another matter, Greg Neeld's attempts to play in the NHL received brief consideration. The association supports Neeld's bid to play as long as he accepts the risk of injury to his remaining eye.

Earlier, league board of governors rejected use of a helmet designed to protect Neeld's good eye. He has been drafted by Buffalo Sabres of the NHL.

A Rookie Senior Is in Command

CALGARY (CP) — John Powyen, 20-year-old rookie competitor in the Royal Canadian Golf Association senior championship, managed a five-over-par 75 on his home course Thursday for a seven-stroke lead after 3 holes of the 54-hole event.

Powyen, president of the Canadian Alberta association and former Alberta Willingdon Cup team member, totalled 149 for the first two rounds, one ahead of rehemates Art Davis and Galloway MacDonald and Bill Simmons of Richmond, B.C., and two ahead of Bob Manaloff of Calgary.

Dr. Bill Reid of Prince Albert was three shots away. Paired at 153 were B.C. senior champion Bob Thompson and Vic Palmer, both of Victoria.

Thompson had a four-over-par 74 Thursday's second-best score. A three-over 73 was turned in by Gordon Verlee of Victoria, grouped at 157, eight shots off the lead.

Five-time leader Henry Mitchell of Vancouver faded to a tie for ninth place, shooting 83. Mitchell, 1971 champion, was grouped at 154 by Jack Nash of London, Ont., winner in 1970, Ernie Butler of Penticton, B.C., and Hedgewick Hedgewick of Windsor, Ont.

Nash had 81 while Butler and Hedgewick each shot 79.

Merle Noyes of Fort Colborne, Ont., runnerup last year, shot 79 for a five-way tie at 158.

CALEDON, Ont. (CP) — Louis Lessard of Leetville, Que., and Wayne Pullen of Dorchester, Ont., continue to lead the standings after Thursday's action in the Canadian archery championships.

Miss Lessard has opened up a 40-point spread over Juliette Rochon, of Val d'or, Que., who had a 582 round Thursday.

In the men's division, Pullen has a nine-point edge over Ron Lippert, of Kitchener, Ont. Daniel Desnoyers of Loretville is in third place and defending champion Don Warren of Hanley, B.C., shot 1,060 to move to within eight points of Desnoyers.

All four men's leaders shot scores exceeding the national record. Pullen gets credit for the mark-1,069. He also held the previous mark of 1,065 points, set last year.

Kevin Tudge of Victoria has the junior men's title secured with 1,156 points after three rounds. Clinton Shewchuk of Oliver, Man. is second with 1,078.

Calgary's Nancy Lovo has assured herself of the junior girls championship with a score of 1,236. In second spot is Linda Adamson of Belleville with 1,210.

Bobby Cole's 66 a Course Record

Huish the Leader at Carnoustie

CARNOUSTIE, Scotland (AP) — There are more than a few differences between a weekend golfer and a top tournament professional. One of them is that the pro likes a course to be tough enough to challenge him.

And that is what Carnoustie, the sprawling 7,065-yard, par-72 course on the edge of the North Sea, has not done in the 1975 British Open players.

After the first two rounds, the field of 153 is led by David Huish, a tough, unknown Scot who followed his first-round 69 with what would have been a record 67 in Thursday's second round.

That put him at 136, eight under par and two strokes ahead of Tom Watson of the United States, Britain's Peter Oosterhuis—the first-round leader—South African Andrew Oosterhuis and Bobby Cole.

Carnoustie, described by Hale Irwin of the U.S. as a "sleeping giant," was still sleeping as the second round finished, and after rain had broken a five-week drought it was playing quietly. In fact, Ben Hogan's 23-year-old course record of 68 was broken by five players.

Cole's 66 is the course record and it put him into strong contention. But he is two strokes back at 138. Cole, 31, a teaching Scottish pro who delighted the countryman in the gallery with 16,000. The last Scottish-born player to win this crown was Tommy Armour in 1931, and by then he was a U.S. citizen.

Some of the U.S. players like Irwin are apprehensive. "I go out fearing for my life, but nothing happens," said the man who stands at 139 and is sixth.

Others, like Watson and John Mahaffey, who is tied with Irwin at 141, are disappointed. "I haven't seen Carnoustie play as I've been told it does," Mahaffey said. "Jack Nicklaus was telling me about it and it certainly is easier than he said."

"I'd like to see Carnoustie since its tests a bit," said Watson. "I came here expecting a great cold—a sort of challenge—and all I get is the weather, you get on U.S. courses."

The 153 starters were cut to 66 for the second round, with 149 as the cut-off point.

Twice during the second round the course record, which Oosterhuis had equalled in Wednesday's first round, was broken, first by Graham Marsh of Australia with 67 then by Cole's 66. And three other players—Huish, Watson and Britain's Bernard Gallacher—also broke 68.

For the first 36 holes, par was equaled or bettered 30 times, four for those who like their courses tough, the villain was the weather—wind, rain and cold. Twenty-five players failed to break 80 in the worst conditions that have been shared so far.

Nicklaus, who won the Open at Carnoustie 10 years ago, is joined at 140 along with Johnny Miller. Tom Weiskopf and Lee Trevino are at 145 and Arnold Palmer and Tony Jacklin, the 4 champion Gary Player at 146.

CPGA Championship Play

Wright Gets It All Together

TORONTO (CP) — The forthrong of golfers can change quickly as demonstrated Thursday by Bill Wright of Edmonton, Dan Baldwinson of Brandon, Man., and Michel Boyer of Montreal.

Wright emerged with the lead in the first round of the Canadian Professional Golfers' Association championship on the 6,445-yard, par-71 Bayview Golf and Country Club course.

The Edmonton native shot a 68, equalling the course record. He had a one-stroke lead over Halldorson and Bill Tapp of Woodbridge, Ont., formerly of Kitchener.

Boyer, taking a four-stroke penalty for having too many clubs in his bag, shot an 80.

It was a complete reversal from a month ago when the 20-year-old Boyer won the Ontario Open by six strokes at Barrie, Ont. In that tournament, Wright missed the cut and Halldorson went home after the first two rounds, unable to continue because of a virus infection that had bothered him for almost six weeks.

Wright said he has been "working hard, making some changes on my long game" and was happy to "get it all together" in Thursday's first round of this $35,000, 72-hole tournament.

Halldorson said he is still not fully recovered from the infection that kept him at home for the last month.

Boyer, who inadvertently left an extra one-iron in his bag and wasn't sure it is still the fifth hole, took the maximum four-stroke penalty and said he will try to make the cut for the final two rounds.

Still in the running for the $7,000 first prize is George Knudson of Toronto, two strokes back at three-under 68 along with Gar Hamilton of Toronto.

Among the group of nine at 69 were Bill Collins of Winnipeg and Bob Rose of Hamilton while Will Homemik of Winnipeg was another Toronto pro at one-under 70.

A total of 20 golfers broke par. Another 11 were at even, including defending champion Moe Norman of Clifford, Ont., Phil Gawas of Woodstock and Bill Wakeham of Duncan, B.C.

Bob Panasiuk of Windsor, Ont., CPGA champ in 1972 and 1973, and Bob Cui Jr. of Vancouver, 1969 champ, were among a group at 72.

Al Balding of Toronto, four-time winner of this title, withdrew before the start of the tournament saying his game wasn't in shape.

After today's round, the field will be cut to the low 70 and ties for the final two rounds.

Wright, 24, scored five birdies and would have broken the course record set last year by Ontario Open winner Artie McNicklе of the United States except that he dropped a bogey on the final hole.

Halldorson started his round on the back nine with a par on the 10th hole. Then he birdied 11, ran into two bogeys, then another two birdies before two more pars.

Then he started the front nine and scored another one for two holes, both with chip shots, then he finished up with a birdie on the eighth for a five-under-par 66 on the front nine after a one-over 37 on the back.

Leafs Sign Ashby

TORONTO (CP) — Toronto Maple Leafs announced Thursday that centre Don Ashby, the National Hockey League club's No. 1 amateur draft list month, has signed a multi-year contract.

Ashby, a 20-year-old native of Kamloops, B.C., was selected in the seventh round of the draft. He played with Calgary Centennials of the Western Canada seasons, completing the 1974-75 campaign with 32 goals and 68 assists for 100 points.

Calgary Cowboys, formerly Vancouver Blazers, of the World Hockey Association made substantial offer for Ashby's services.

"I suppose I was leaning heavily towards the NHL from the start because from the time I was very young I'd been watching the games on television," Ashby said.

No terms or length of the contract were revealed.

Cowan in Charge in Amateur Tourney

Slow Play, Not Weather, a Problem

KITCHENER, Ont. (CP) — Gary Cowan of Kitchener, leader after three rounds of the Ontario amateur golf tournament, had to deal with high winds, rain and lightning on his way to a two-under-par 70 Thursday at Westmount Golf and Country Club.

Later, he said the adverse weather conditions weren't his biggest problem.

Cowan and his playing partners, Rod Spittle of Fort Erie and Wayne Kimura of Toronto, were often as much as two holes behind the group they followed.

"We were slow today," the defending tournament champion said. "It's disgusting the pace that slow. We were four hours and 30 minutes playing that round and that's ridiculous.

"Those guys just seem to diddle-diddle around. Maybe they watch too much pro golf on TV."

Cowan and his group were the last threesome to tee off and played with the threat of rain the whole round. They started in the rain but it let up after they finished the first hole.

The lightning began when they hit the 16th hole and Cowan started pressing the group to get it. They putted out on the final hole in a downpour. Cowan hit 16 greens in regulation but wasn't happy with his performance.

"I've shot a 72, a 71 and 70 and each time it's been about the highest I could have been," he said. "Some of those holes Cowan hit 16 greens in regulation but wasn't happy with his performance.

Cowan's 213 total is four strokes ahead of 20-year-old Mike Mealia of Toronto, his only real challenger for the crown, who scrambled to an even-par 72 and a 217 total.

Mealia said he wasn't consistent, but was better than his three-over-par 75 Wednesday.

IN MEMORIAM

HUFFMAN — In loving memory of a dear sister June Francis who passed away July 11, 1975.
Softly the leaves of memory fall,
Gently we gather treasure from all,
Some may forget now that you're gone,
We will remember no matter how long.
—Lovingly missed by sisters Eva and Pearl, brothers-in-law Harry and Dean.

HUFFMAN — In loving memory of our dear father and grandmother who passed away one year ago to-day.
Through tears we watched her suffer
We saw her fade away,
Our hearts were almost broken,
She fought so hard to stay.
We watched her in her sleeping,
So peacefully in her pain,
We could not wish you back,
To suffer as she did.
Our hearts still ache with sadness,
And tears will flow for years,
For what we miss most is love and kisses,
No one will ever know,
You suffered so much, your pleasures few,
We never deserved what you went through,
You stood the test, you stood it well,
But what you suffered no one can tell,
You left us quietly, your thoughts unknown,
But you left us a memory we are proud to own
—Lovingly remembered, sadly missed by Ethel and family, son Jack and family.

MORGAN — In loving memory of a dear father and grandfather Thomas Morgan who died one year ago on July 16, 1975.
A silent thought, a secret tear,
Keeps his memory ever dear,
Time takes away the edge of grief,
But nothing can take away the loss of a father and grandfather, —Sadly missed by daughters Doris, Edna and Lorrie and families.

SHORT, Pressly Henry — In loving memory of a dear father and grandfather who passed away July 11, 1970.
Gone from our hearts but never from our memory,
With silent thoughts and unshed tears,
Life goes on, we miss you dad,
But for the same since we lost you.
—Lovingly remembered by daughter Kathleen and family, son Leon and family.

Multilingual Station on Air

WINNIPEG (CP) — "Maybe the Canadian Radio-(CRTC) got sick and tired of my applications and gave me the Winnipeg radio frequency to get rid of me."

That's Casimir Stancykowski light-heartedly assessing the reason the government regulatory agency approved his request to establish CKJS, Winnipeg's first multilingual station. The 24-hour operation began broadcasting in 15 languages in March.

Cas, as he is universally known, is not bitter that it took him nine years and six applications before he could hit the Winnipeg airwaves.

The 46-year-old Montrealer likes to think his "Scottish-Polish persistence" paid off. As one of the CRTC's perennial applicants, he's learned to be patient.

It took almost six years before he was given the go-ahead in 1962 for CFMB Montreal, which paved the way for ethnic broadcasting in Canada. And without batting an eye, Cas confesses that he has been badgering the decision-makers for almost seven years now to add a frequency modulation (FM) side to CFMB.

He would have made a perfect study for one of Horatio Alger's rags-to-riches, adversity-to-honor novels.

Cas arrived in Montreal as an 18-year-old immigrant in 1947 from Poland, via Scotland, with barely the clothes on his back and a "Scottish burr on top of broken English."

Born in Warsaw, at 14 he was already a veteran of the Polish underground army. That led to a concentration camp in 1944 in Germany, from which he eventually escaped to Scotland.

The concentration camp experience had reduced his weight to about 100 pounds — stretched over a tall, large-boned frame.

However, a few months of Scottish cooking and he was up to a mere respectable 170 pounds. This respectability has been enhanced even more

In 1950, a friend bet him 25 Success and prosperity notwithstanding, he often breakfasts on the familiar Scottish porridge "thick enough to stand a spoon in."

Cas held down as many as six jobs at a time in Montreal—"anything to make a buck"—ranging from writing for a Polish-American newspaper to selling real estate. At the same time he held down a full-time mill clerk's job at Eaton's and took night classes at university.

In 1960, a friendlier him 25 cents that Cas couldn't arrange a Polish radio program in Montreal. Three weeks later the friend lost the wager and Cas was off and running with a 15-minute program on long-defunct CHLP.

Ironically, in 1962 Cas opened CFMB using the same frequency held by CHLP before it had closed five years earlier.

Now, in the best Alger tradition, Cas finds himself mixing in all levels of society. He's one of the few young immigrants to be made a member of the Order of Canada, and in 1972 was granted an honorary doctor of laws degree from Montreal's Sir George Williams University.

As president of the Canadian Citizenship Federation he travels constantly across Canada preaching citizenship to the ethnic community at large, as well as pushing for changes in immigration laws.

One of his successful battles was to have the wording changed on Canadian passports to eliminate references to whether the holder was Canadian-born or naturalized.

Even so, his almost hu-ge pride in being a Canadian doesn't vary for one second the Polish in him. The ethnic radio stations are simply the tip of his total commitment to preserving the cultural heritage of all Canadians whose origins are other than English or French.

There's hardly an area of ethnic life in Canada that hasn't felt his influence at one time or another.

Cas was one of the founders—and first president—of the Quebec Folk Arts Council, the first of its kind in Canada. He's also into such things as ethnic sports and a multitude of community activities.

His main hobby also follows the ethnic commitment. He describes one of his main joys in life as possessing possibly the largest collection of Polish artifacts and documents outside Poland itself.

He exhibits across Canada and senior Polish officials have travelled to Montreal for a more detailed look at the collection.

Cas says he has the proof in his collection that the mother of Bonnie Prince Charlie was Polish.

One of his dreams is to be able to donate the collection to a national ethnic museum, which he eagerly wants to see established by the federal government in Ottawa, perhaps as part of the National Museum of Canada.

Of the nine languages he speaks fluently, Cas considers English the most exotic because he can't seem to shake his Polish accent.

Charity Sang First at Five

KITCHENER, Ont. (CP) — Charity Brown doesn't think "there was ever a time when I didn't want to be a singer."

The 24-year-old Kitchener native, who has had a couple of name changes in the eight years that she has been performing professionally, recalled in an interview that as a child she "idolized everybody that was ever in a musical."

She was Phyllis Boltz when at age five, just starting school, she alone put up her hand when the teacher asked who could sing God Save The Queen. She had been taught the anthem by her sister and she sang it then, but it wasn't a case, however, of instant thrills at being in the spotlight.

"I was so embarrassed I started to cry half way through it. I didn't want to sing in front of those kids."

Her principal ambition when she entered high school was "to be in musicals," but fate determined otherwise.

"Some guys at the school were getting a rock band together and were looking for a girl singer who could sound like Grace Slick (of Jefferson Airplane)."

"I wasn't that much into rock, and I really didn't think I was good enough. They gave me Grace Slick's White Rabbit and said if I could sing it I could join their band."

The outcome was that she became the lone female and lead vocalist in the five-member band called Rain.

While with the group, she changed her surname to Brown. Charity is a recent replacement for Phyllis which came about because there was a singer in the United States who also was using the name Phyllis Brown.

"It was a bit ironic that after changing her name, the other Brown also dropped Phyllis, in favor of Polly."

She was a nominee this spring for the Canadian music industry's Juno Award in the category of most promising new female artist.

With her own back-up band of four male musicians, she's been drawing large crowds in nightclub engagements in Kitchener, Cambridge and Toronto, with other early-summer club dates scheduled for Ottawa and Sarnia. Her first album, Rock Me, was released in late June.

The mother of a young son, Charity feels both a family and a career are necessary to her life.

"I really want to be a star-it's a life-long ambition. But I won't risk my sanity for money or for fame, because singing for me is a big part of my emotional security."

Your Horoscope

By BERNICE BEDE OSOL

For Saturday, July 12

ARIES (March 21-April 20) Strive to do essential talks in the a.m. Afternoon will find you unproductive. You'll erroneously feel ill earth shaked against you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) A self-centered outlook today drives you to be extravagant with your resources as well as those of others. This could prove costly.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Use the morning hours to recharge your energies. You tend to be argumentative and will be better company for yourself than for the family.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Do-it-yourself projects should be avoided—you'll probably hurt your thumb with a hammer! Relax. Have friends in, instead.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Try to keep low on finances today. A large expenditure is unrealistic when you tally the cost, you'll find it won't worth it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Be realistic in your evaluation of family members' abilities. You tend to expect more than they are able to give.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) It's not a good day for you to travel. You're restless, easily bored and the tensions of traffic will unduly irritate you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 22) You could be led astray financially by your mate or a friend who talks you into a situation costing more than you can afford.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You'll be expecting credit for an accomplishment before you have earned it. Avoid hard feelings by jotting down the boosts—solo.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 20) You'll have high hopes in the morning and feel deflated in the afternoon. Don't be put out, it just wasn't your day.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Your feelings are too intense today for you to feel comfortable around others. Seek solitude. Avoid disappointment.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) You imagine others place too many burdens on your shoulders today. Keep yourself busy doing personal errands, lift the mood passes.

Sleeper Chokes, Remedy Sought

By G. C. THORSTEN, MD

Dear Dr. Thorsten: Among the last three years I have awakened from the night choking or strangling. At first I seem unable to draw even a breath. Do you have any explanation for this?

I am 68 years old. I have a hiatal hernia. Could this have anything to do with my condition? Also, during the night I have moisture in my throat. What can I do?—Mrs. D. A. F.,

Investigators have recently described a new disorder, the "sleep apnea," is associated with insomnia, and that symptoms you describe seem to match it. Sleep-apnea means the transient cessation of breathing, or more correctly of the breathing impulse. It has been found to occur in about 10 per cent of the population during sleep.

The Stanford University medical school researcher who studied it report that it is associated with a temporary disturbance in the movement of the diaphragm "et" with an obstruction in the breathing apparatus, or a combination of both. The exact cause of the diaphragm problem is unclear, although it could be symptomatic of a hidden, neurological disorder.

The breathing obstruction is more easily understood, perhaps caused by defects in the nose or throat or by excessive mucus in the bronchial system. Overweight may be a factor also. Other factors such as excessive smoking, a dusty atmosphere or an allergy may also cause this plug.

You mention a hiatal hernia. It is possible that some reflux, a backing-up of digestive juices into the throat, could occur, especially when you are reclining.

What can you do if it continues? Obstructive factors could be corrected, if necessary. You can elevate your upper body while sleeping if the hiatal hernia is a factor. This would alleviate the reflux problem. If you are overweight, reduce, and if you are a heavy smoker, cut down or quit altogether.

You should have a thorough examination for your throat and throat, as well as a chest x-ray.

There always may be brief interruptions in the involuntary breathing during sleep, but one as apparently severe as this which causes arousals from sleep, calls for further investigation.

Such disturbances have been the subject of growing interest in recent years, and they may be a principal factor in many cases of insomnia, which up to now have defied diagnosis.

Dear Dr. Thorsten: What are the harmful effects, if any, of chewing tobacco?—E. E. A.

Opinion varies on this subject. One report indicates that cancer of the mouth and tongue can occur. Another, from the University of Tennessee College of Medicine, concludes that chewing tobacco is not carcinogenic (cancer-producing).

Chewing tobacco can irritate the membranes of the mouth and gums however, a white growth, called leukoplakia, can result, and this may be precancerous. Notice that I say "may be."

Nicotine swallowed can quicken the heart rate and increase the flow of stomach acid.

Dear Dr. Thorsten: I'm taking iron tablets and vitamin C daily.

I'm curious as to whether these provide any calories?—T. Y.

They don't.

Equestrian Diploma Offered

OLIVER, B.C. (CP) — The symptoms of stringhalt or the difficult mountain passage and pirouette are all part of a day's instruction in the equestrian diploma course at Okanagan College.

The program, which runs just over two months, prepares students for careers as professional riding instructors. Students must bring their own horses and are responsible for their care.

Prospective students are screened before being admitted. Knowledge of riding and basic horse care are required for entrance. Enrolment is limited to those over 18, and no credit hours must be put in for a diploma.

The principal section is the horsemanship and riding instructors' course where horse students bring their own horses and are coached the British Three Day Event Team and twice coached the Canadian Three Day Event team.

Two graduates who have put their training to practical use are Margaret Ames and Eileen Redmond of Vancouver. Miss Ames works at a thoroughbred breeding farm while Miss Redmond teaches at a higher level than are required on the course and noted that everyone in her class passed the course.

Miss Ames says the course was too demanding and left her plenty of free time.

"In the mornings we would get up and do the horses then have a lecture. Then riding lessons, three groups of about seven in each, then another lecture. We usually finished around 12:30 or 1 p.m.

"After dinner we'd go riding up in the hills. It's real horse country up there."

The four-year-old program has attracted students from as far east as Saskatchewan and throughout the northwest United States.

After getting the PHA certificate—equivalent of novice instructor—and teaching for two years, students can return and take their instructor's degree. A senior instructor's certificate may be taken after two more years of teaching.

During the course, students live in trailers on ranch near the Oliver riding stables. The stables are host to the Okanagan International Horse Show each May. It attracts top riders from Canada and the western states.

By Oswald and James Jacoby

South wanted to know why North had given him a free raise to two spades. North replied, "It was a pretty bad bid, but it seemed a good idea at the time. Anyway, what was wrong with the bid, considering the vul? You were just unlucky to find everything so bad."

North's free bid was really a bad one. His hearts were too bottom and his spade support almost nothing. However, four spades would have been reached anyway since South had enough strength to bid it by himself.

Perfect defence would beat four spades. West would have to lead a heart at trick two, but West cashed his diamond before leading a heart.

At this point South went wrong. He couldn't resist the temptation to finesse the queen of hearts. East took his king and led the suit back to knock out dummy's ace and kill an entry.

South should have played dummy's nine of hearts. East would have won, but would not have been able to lead a second heart. South would cash two trumps; play king, ace and another club; enter dummy with the nine of trumps; ruff another club; enter dummy with the ace of hearts, and discard his last heart on the fifth club.

From Florida:

My partner opens one spade. What should he do with:

♠ Q 6 5 ♥ 3 2 ♦ A 7 6 5 ♣ 7 6 5 4 3 2

Raise him to two spades. If he bids anything else, the contract belongs to your opponents. You can't make two spades on it. If he has a really good hand he can bid two and your support should be enough for him.

Eye Exercise

China's Latest Health Program

VANCOUVER (CP) — The eyes have it as far as physical fitness is concerned in the People's Republic of China.

Barbara Chinn, a University of British Columbia student who recently visited China, says eye exercise is the latest development in physical fitness by the Chinese.

"It's a type of facial massaging aimed at the eyes," she says. "Special music is played and they do it twice a day in the schools.

"This is very good for the eyes. You notice that very few people wear glasses, not like here or Hong Kong."

Miss Chinn, 21, said eye exercise was just recently added to the physical fitness program, long a part of the Chinese student or worker's daily routine.

Miss Chinn, who spent three weeks in China with 16 Canadian college instructors and students examining physical education, also noticed that Chinese children appeared to be better at sports than Canadian children the same age.

"Children start activity much younger. Even in primary school they are very well co-ordinated and agile."

Arlene MacLeod, 20, another student, agreed. She said adults also appear to be more fit than a majority of Canadians "because it's a requirement of their ideology."

"Physical fitness is promoted at a very young age. The ones that are better at it are geared into spare-time sports school to improve what ability they have and come out fantastic athletes."

Both said they believed the Chinese youngsters' success at sports is because competition is downgraded.

"They don't look on competition in the way we do," says Miss Chinn. "It's friends before competition.

"Competing is meeting new friends and that's how you improve skills—playing others and learning from them. I don't like this competitive aspect. That's why many kids get turned off sports before they get to high school because they're not good enough."

Alarm Developed

STOCKHOLM (AP) —An electronic alarm system transmitting an alarm directly to firemen and key points in the area has been developed by Lars Ericsson Telematerial. The new system can sound alarms on large indicators up to 12 miles from the source of the fire.

Midnight Mishap Kills 4 Persons

By NAN WHITLAW and ROBIN CHASE
Staff Reporters

BANCROFT — Two 18-year-old western Ontario youths were two of four persons killed in a one-car accident on the South Baptiste Rd. about 10 miles northwest of this village early today.

Ontario Provincial Police at Bancroft identified two of the victims as Andrew McDonald Hunter of London and Allan D. Watson of Guelph.

Names of the other two occupants of the car are being withheld pending notification of next of kin, a police spokesman said.

According to police, the late-model car, which received extensive damage, was westbound on the paved tourist road about six miles in from Highway 62 when it went out of control for an undetermined reason.

Police said the car flipped over and rolled sideways down an embankment where it came to rest on its roof in a pile of rocks. None of the victims were thrown from the vehicle.

There were heavy fog patches in the area at the time, police noted. The road runs through a lightly populated area and it is not known how long the car lay unnoticed before police were notified at 12:47 a.m.

South Baptiste Rd. connects Highway 62 to Highway 25 at Highland Grove. It runs just past the village of Baptiste.

Bancroft OPP said the accident is the worst fatality they have investigated this year.

CBC Applies For French TV At Belleville

OTTAWA (CP) — A CBC application for French-language Petersburg, Kingston and Belleville, Ont., is among several licence applications to be considered by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission here Sept. 9.

The stations would operate on channels 44, 32, and 13 respectively carrying the programs of CBLFT Toronto.

CBC also seeks licences for French-language FM stations in Kingston and Belleville to rebroadcast the CBC French AM network service of CJBC Toronto.

Also sought are licences for television stations at Cambridge Bay and Coppermine N.W.T. to broadcast the CBC northern service received by satellite.

In addition CBC wants licences for FM radio stations at Cambridge Bay and Coppermine. The Coppermine station would carry the CBC English network from CFYK Yellowknife. Cambridge Bay would broadcast English and native-language service received by satellite.

Lisbon Defence Leaders Declare Low-key Alert

LISBON (AP) — Portugal's military leaders declared a low-level military alert today following the withdrawal of the Socialist party from the government.

A spokesman for the Continental Defence Command (Copcon) said the alert was a "state of vigilance."

He said it was called because the military had reports that "reactionary forces" were planning to meet. He specifically mentioned a scheduled meeting of small shopkeepers in the resort of Cascais.

Earlier today, the military gave Premier Vasco Goncalves three ·en to replace the Socialists who defected from the coalition cabinet.

The shopkeepers are reported to have called off the meeting at Cascais, 15 miles west of Lisbon.

The Copcon spokesman said some units were confined to quarters but he declined to say how many troops were involved.

The alert, the first since the governmental crisis bubbled up last week and the first acknowledged one since a March 11 counter-coup against the leftist leaders failed, followed newspaper reports of a few manoeuvres by reactionary ·elements."

A communique early today by the ruling Revolutionary Council said the Socialist withdrawal from the government opened the door to "counter-revolutionary forces."

Brushing aside the Socialist withdrawal, the council today gave Communist-backed Premier Goncalves free rein to replace the Socialists in the cabinet with what it called "competent and patriotic elements."

Talks May Produce Peace

BONN (AP) — U.S. State Secretary Henry Kissinger and Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin held talks today near the West German capital that could lead to an interim Sinai settlement or dampen U.S.-Israeli relations.

Earlier Kissinger held a working breakfast with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher where the focus was on the Middle East.

Peron Dismisses Welfare Minister

BUENOS AIRES (AP) — President Isabel Peron, yielding to labor pressure, has ousted conservative Welfare Minister Jose Lopez Rega but included three of his closest allies in a reconstituted cabinet.

But it was not clear whether the shuffle would satisfy widespread demands for changes in Argentina's top leadership.

All members of Mrs. Peron's old cabinet submitted their resignations last weekend in a futile effort to head off a general strike threatened by labor leaders.

The strike went ahead but ended early after Mrs. Peron rescinded a limit on wage increases to which labor objected. It also was reported she agreed then to reshuffle the cabinet.

While most members of the cabinet were retained, with old or new portfolios, Lopez Rega was not among them. Mrs. Peron accepted his resignation.

Lopez Rega said Friday he offered his resignation to "secure the pacification of the disturbed spirits" who fought for it.

"Some names have changed, but not the orientation," said a spokesman for the Radical Civic Union, the main opposition group.

There was no immediate indication what role Lopez Rega, 58, might play in Argentine politics.

It was presumed he will keep his private position as Mrs. Peron's personal secretary.

Lopez Rega, a former policeman who rose to power under the late Juan Peron, was displaced as welfare minister by Carlos Villone, a staff aide, and as presidential secretary by Julio Gonzalez, another of his confidants.

Rifles Turned In

BRAMPTON, Ont. (CP) — Peel regional police say they will destroy 100 rifles, shotguns and other firearms next Wednesday, some of which have been turned in by residents following the fatal shootings of three persons in May at a high school in this town just west of Toronto. Police said some of the guns were confiscated at Toronto International Airport while others were used in crimes.

Search Reveals Nothing

KINGSTON, Ont. (CP) — A surprise security sweep of federal prisons Friday turned up "nothing of consequence" in Ontario, says Henry Neufeld, deputy regional director of penitentiaries. The sweep had been ordered to take place in all federal prisons within 10 days or so but some already had been searched.

Trudeau Pool Ready

OTTAWA (CP) — After several recent plunges into political hot water over construction of his backyard swimming hole, Prime Minister Trudeau will be able to dive into his swimming pool next weekend. Completion of cosmetic details in the pool houses is the only thing preventing a prime ministerial plunge in the 20 by 40 foot pool, built over the last six months — at a cost of more than $200,000 — at 24 Sussex Drive.

28 Cases Solved

MONTREAL (CP) — Twenty eight cases of Quebec children born with defects caused by the drug thalidomide which their mothers took during pregnancy have been settled, lawyers representing the children said Friday.

Receive Spouse Benefits

OTTAWA (CP) — Old age pensioners will receive forms to apply for spouse benefits with their September cheques. Health Minister Marc Lalonde said Friday in the Commons. The forms also will be available at old age security offices. The Commons is debating legislation to extend pension benefits to many pensioners' spouses between the ages of 60 and 64. Old age security payments now are available only to those 65 and over.

Calls for Inquiry

HAMILTON (CP) — Reports of schoolyard assaults, increasing vandalism and disorderliness have resulted in the Hamilton board of education calling for a closed inquiry.

Parks Get Cops

TORONTO (CP) — Ontario has added riot control trained officers to the staff of its provincial parks, Natural Resources Minister Leo Bernier said Friday.

Asks for Apology

TORONTO (CP) — Allan Grossman, Ontario secretary for resource development, Friday demanded a public apology from Prime Minister Trudeau for a comment in the House of Commons linking Mr. Grossman to the problem of allowing the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) entry to Canada.

Student Swims Lake

NIAGARA ON THE LAKE, Ont. (CP) — Angela Kondrick was reported about half way across Lake Ontario today some 10 hours after she began a try to become the youngest swimmer to overcome the challenge. The 13 year old Toronto high school student waded into the lake from a cove at Youngstown, N.Y., at 11:08 p.m. Friday.

Hope for Bald Men

TORONTO (CP) — Twenty people in Toronto have regrown hair in the last nine months raising hopes that baldness may be a thing of the past.

The Globe and Mail says in a copyright story that Dr. Howard Donsky, head of dermatology at Toronto General Hospital, reported on the cases at the Canadian Dermatological Association meeting in Banff, Alta., last week.

Despite Mercy Supplies Kidnappers Hold Officer

BEIRUT (AP) — The fate of a kidnapped U.S. colonel remained uncertain today after tons of food were rushed to slum dwellers in this capital of Lebanon in an apparent bid to save his life.

Kidnappers of Col. Ernest Morgan, 42, of Petersburg, Va., set a deadline of 9 p.m. today — 2 p.m. EDT — for the U.S. embassy to give away hundreds of tons of rice, sugar, flour, margarine and other foodstuffs plus clothing and building materials in the Slaughterhouse District.

The kidnappers had extended the deadline from Wednesday.

Lebanese government relief trucks began distributing about 10 tons of food with Italian markings Friday afternoon. The amount was far short of the kidnappers' demands.

U.S. officials in Washington gave no indication they were deviating from government policy to refuse kidnappers' demands. A U.S. embassy official said the food distribution was "purely a Lebanese affair."

Negotiations for Morgan's release were left to the Lebanese government, which secured help of moderate Palestinian guerrilla groups in a search for the kidnappers.

A spokesman for Lebanon's relief agency said the food had been purchased by Premier Rashid Karami's government in accordance with its vow to help areas ravaged in last month's street fighting between rightwing Christians and radical Palestinian guerrillas supported by leftist Lebanese Moslems.

Morgan was seized June 29 while on an overnight sleepover on his way back to Turkey. A group calling itself the Socialist Revolutionary Action Organization claimed responsibility.

The Palestine Liberation Organization said the kidnappers were using a cover name for extremist splinter groups and accused the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-Gen. Ahmed Jibril's group and the Popular Front Struggle of involvement. Both groups denied the charge.

Towering Inferno?

TORONTO (CP) — Fire broke out above the 1,000-foot level of the CN Tower early today for the second time in less than a week.

The fire was out an hour and a half after it was discovered in the observation section of the restaurant pod. There were no injuries.

The cause and amount of damage were not yet known.

On Tuesday, a fire broke out while workmen were installing wate proofing material 150 feet above the observation pod nearly 1,200 feet up the 1,815-foot tower, largest free-standing structure in the world.

The men scrambled up the tower to escape. Damage was $1,000.

The new blaze brought criticism from firemen. About 40 minutes after they arrived, one was heard to say on the fire department radio:

"The trouble is no one down here knows where anything is. They're still trying to find the buttons to turn on the auxiliary water supply."

Firemen used extinguishers until they could get water.

District Fire Chief Herbert Moores criticized CN Tower officials for not keeping the fire department informed of the tower's fire equipment.

He said firefighters did not know where to find switches to turn on auxiliary power to pump water to the fire from the 600-foot level. Normal pressure cannot pump beyond that. Switches in the pod turn on auxiliary pumps to pump it from there.

Malachy Grant, director of design and construction, said he could not undr stand why there would be a mix-up in getting water.

Truck Rams Bank

By ROBIN CHASE
Staff Reporter

TIL Bank at the corner of Bleecker Avenue and Avenue Road in North Front and College Streets had an unusual after-hours customer Friday evening.

Police Chief Douglas Cross bie said today a flat-bed tow-truck owned by Donald A. Foley Ltd. of Stirrington, Ont., rolled across College St. from a service station lot into the brick wall of the bank, causing a hole and damaging a steel upright.

He said it is not known if the vehicle was occupied. Considerable damage was done to the cab's front end and the wall but no estimates are available.

ANAF Lounge Closed Until Structural Survey Complete

By COLIN BRUCE
Staff Reporter

The second floor Tartan Lounge at the Army, Navy and Air Force club will be closed for a month while engineers survey structural damage believed caused by blasting operations next door at the Century Place project.

President Bill Ford said today during an interview with The Intelligencer "there has been extensive damage to the building's washrooms."

The men's downstairs washroom exterior wall is bulged out — window casing and all," said Mr. Ford.

He said a meeting had been held in the Tartan Lounge Friday to discuss the liability for building damage and Century Place contractors Cornerstone Construction Ltd. "will pay for the damage."

The lounge is normally used for banquets and wedding purposes. "We'll lose a number of weddings this summer while we wait for the report," he said. "Anything further than that, you'll have to talk to our lawyer."

John Miller, former city solicitor now in private practice, said he had no information about the wall and denied any knowledge of a meeting Friday, said Mr. Miller.

"There's just no comment," said Mr. Miller.

Defending against any possible weakness in the wall, contractors for the past several weeks have shored up the wall with steel beams.

Allen Devries, superintendent on the Century Place project, said recently, the wall does not present a safety problem for his workers — particularly with the braces in place. "The braces are just a safety measure and it doesn't mean the wall will fall in when the timbers are removed," he said.

He said Century Place will be built up against the club building wall.

Alderman Jo Angelo said today "the city's building inspection department had been keeping an eye on the wall and that inspectors did not feel it was unsafe."

The question of safety was raised Friday when it was rumored construction workers refused to work near the wall in fear it might collapse.

Mr. Devries said he knew nothing about that aspect and said he would have been called if that situation came up.

Builder Says It's Safe

Whether or not the wall of the Army, Navy and Air Force Club, Duke of Edinburgh Unit is safe, the beams will be left in place until the Century Place wall is built against it. Allen Devries, in charge of Century Place construction, said safety men have checked the supports and that there is no danger. The multi million dollar retail and office space complex is expected to be completed by next July.

Closed Meetings Backward Step

By RON CARSON
Staff Reporter

A ministry of education spokesman now is claiming boards of education may conduct all business in camera at least that's the word from information officer John Gillies.

He may be a good information officer but he sure isn't a lawyer. His interpretation of the Education Act is far too liberal and his comments may have set public meetings back 10 years.

The actual wording of the Education Act on meetings has appeared in this column many times before and does not bear repeating. However, no one in his or her right mind could interpret this section to imply boards of education have the right to conduct all their business behind closed doors.

The act, if read and interpreted in a fair and intelligent manner, intends boards of education to do as much of their business in open session as is legally possible. This means that, short of firings and land transactions, everything should be in open session.

For example, in recent months the Hastings County Board of Education has been making an honest effort to comply with the intention of the act. In fact, the policy committee is currently studying its own policy on meetings in order to keep faith with the act.

The Hastings board has all but eliminated the closed session after each meeting. Many of the fears associated with opening up meetings to the public have disappeared among trustees. In fact, many trustees have learned that if they exhibit responsibility the press can also reciprocate.

Obviously, there are some instances involving the sale and tendering of property and buildings which, by law, must be kept secret. And in some cases delicate matters of personnel should be kept in closed sessions.

When boards of education constantly go behind closed doors they are merely seeking a shield from the public eye. They can better serve their political careers in this fashion.

The Hastings - Prince Edward County Separate School Board has yet to deal adequately with this problem even though they revamped their policy on closed meetings to comply with the Education Act. This board continues to hold an hour closed session prior to each open meeting.

There is no committee of the whole agenda printed and there are no minutes of the committee of the whole released after the meeting. Not only does the public miss individual comments but it has no idea of what goes on.

Nevertheless the ministry of education has only compounded the problem by taking a very liberal approach to the legislation.

Goodman Dead at 62

Local businessman Samuel Goodman died in his suite of rooms of Sun Valley Motor Inn Friday in his 62nd year.

Mr. Goodman had been an active businessman with Goodman's Mens Wear, a long-established Front St. shop. He also had business dealings in the retail line in Kingston.

As well as ownership of the motor inn, Mr. Goodman owned several tracts of land in the city and dealt in several forms of housing.

He never married and is survived by his niece Donna Kaplan of Toronto and nephew Henry Goodman also of Toronto.

The funeral for Mr. Goodman will be held in Park Memorial Funeral Home, 310 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Sunday, July 13 at 12 noon. Burial will take place in Toronto.

More Furniture Sought

Donations of used furniture to the Central Volunteer Bureau furniture exchange have increased but still more articles are required to fill requests.

Rev. Haley, student in charge of the program, said during an interview about a dozen families have volunteered beds and household articles — the result of a story in The Intelligencer last week.

"We still have a lot of requests that cannot yet be filled," said Miss Haley.

She said the need particularly needs beds - and dressers.

The furniture exchange program is housed in the William St. offices of the United Community Services and has a pickup service to collect donated furniture.

For further information contact Miss Haley during business hours at 962-1353.

Arthritis Society Opens Booth to Explain Work

PICTON — An information booth and film showing at the Armory Mall here sponsored by the Prince Edward Chapter of the Canadian Arthritis and Rheumatism Society, drew a large crowd Friday night.

Purpose of the information centre, said campaign chairman Robert Renaud, was to provide public information about arthritis and rheumatism. He said that in the past the society has not been too successful in fund raising, and it is hoped that through the booth interested people would form a fund-raising committee.

Gordon Bell, regional representative of the Society said he is especially appreciative of the Armory Mall, the Prince Edward Heights Workshop and a free grocery store for assistance they gave in making the booth a success. Four youths who also assisted in the showing were Kevin Merchant, Chris Woodward, Michele Dousett and Christine Dousett.

Caterpillar Epidemic Alarms Manitobans

WINNIPEG (CP) — Last year, two men from Alonsa, Man., walked into the office of Environment Minister Sidney Green carrying a plastic bag full of slithering green forest tent caterpillars, demanding action on a problem that reaches epidemic proportions in some parts of the province every year.

Although the men were appeased by the minister's staff, their dramatic appeal for help exemplified the growing concern of Manitobans toward the annual infestation of insects and the problems associated with controlling the menace.

Early in June, a horde of ravenous caterpillars invaded the, community of Lac du Bonnet, about 60 miles north-east of Winnipeg, and methodically stripped the leaves from thousands of trees. Last year, residents were engulfed with swarms of the insects that crawled through homes, lawns and parklands, posing a serious threat to the area's tourist industry.

Residents have continually urged the government to embark on a comprehensive system of chemical spraying to control the insect, but provincial officials insist the responsibility lies with either municipal governments or individuals.

Although insecticides are clearly wanted by residents in areas such as Lac du Bonnet and Alonsa, the use of the chemical methoxychlor in Winnipeg to control the annual infestation of cankerworms has recently drawn severe criticism.

Irene Stein, who heads a citizen's group called Citizens Against Slow Poisoning (CASP), has emerged as the central figure in the campaign to persuade the city to stop using the chemical. She says methoxychlor represents a serious threat to health due to its close chemical similarity to DDT, banned from Canada in 1969.

She says she became aware of the problem when her two children became nauseated after trees near their school were sprayed with the chemical.

In a letter to Canada Television by the Manitoba Clean Environment Commission following the city to use methoxychlor in its insect-abatement program, Mrs. Stein said the chemical has not been proven safe.

Dr. Frank La Bella, a pharmacist at University of Manitoba, says the use of any chemical to control insects without determining the long-range effects is "criminal and suicidal."

"Eve-thing produces effects. The problem is relating the application to the cause."

And Dr. Carlos Huerto, a Winnipeg physician, says methoxychlor has been medically linked to cancer.

"We know that and it's been said before."

But Dr. Bert Ellis, the only entomologist employed full time by any city in Canada, says any chemical used by the city is sufficiently diluted to prevent any potential harmful effects on humans.

Gardening Column

Plan Now For Insects

By ROSS HAWTHORNE

It has been an early year for Insects. That May heat wave forced them into bloom a little ahead of their time. And so, in many gardens the first wave of bloom is finishing or even finished. And with this decline there's a tendency towards neglect, forgetting that there's much more to come, especially if your rose garden includes floribundas and grandifloras.

Hybrid teas bloom in waves, in early summer and fall, and intermittently in between. Floribundas and grandifloras put on a continual show. But progressive flowering of all three types depends on a number of factors: 1) pruning, 2) Spraying for insect and fungus, 3) feeding, 4) watering.

Proper pruning is important. Once blossoms are spent, prune the cane ¼" above the first 5-leaved floral below the blossom or cluster of blossoms. It is from this point that the new blossom-bearing stem will emerge.

—And the insect population is at its horrendous best this year. And roses have a lot of enemies in the bug department, especially:

Aphids: Those little ⅛ inch pear-shaped bugs that come in colors of green, grey, brown, red or even lavender. They love new growth and their presence will be shown by curled or puckered leaves or buds. In addition, they secrete a substance called honey dew, which is why ants herd them and milk them like cattle. But the honey dew is also a germinating ground for a black sooty fungus which doesn't do your roses any good either.

Spider Mites: Tiny, microscopic insects in red, green or yellow. They themselves are almost invisible but their damage is not. In sucking the sap, they'll pepper the leaves with tiny white spots and hang them with tiny white cobwebs.

The Beetles: The brownish Rose Chafer, the greylish-brown Fuller Rose Beetle and the red long-nosed Rose Curculio. It's their larvae that do the damage, working on the underside of the leaves and it left undisturbed will reduce your rose shrubs to skeletons in short order.

Leaf Hoppers: Those little wedge-shaped bugs that go sideway — and seem to vanish when you touch them. But when they're standing still, they work on the underside of the leaves, creating white stippled effects on the tops and causing the edges to curl.

In the fungus department, July and August are two of the months when powdery mildew and black spot flourish. The former appears as a white or greyish slippery coating on both canes and leaf buds. Leaves develop a bushed appearance, turn dry and fall — buds are deformed and twisted and fail to blossom. Best treatment — preventative spraying. And the same treatment is desirable for the deadly black spot — the rose's worst enemy. I hope you never see it, but if you do, black spot looks like this. A black spot appears on leaves and the tissue surrounding the spot turns bright yellow and the leaf dies and falls. In a very short time it can almost wipe out a rose bed — so believe me — it's nothing to fool with.

Of course the best lines of defence against garden pests and diseases that attack roses are good health and housekeeping. Well fed, well watered roses in a garden kept free of weeds, dead leaves and other debris is less open to attack, and if trouble comes, are far more capable of handling it, as compared with roses that are underfed and up to their buds in weeds.

Dodds Setting Good Example

By MARG HAYLOCK
Staff Reporter

PICTON — A firm believer in flower power, horticulturalist Philip Dodds of Cherry Valley, this week received formal recognition from town council for his efforts toward beautifying town parks.

The retired news editor received a thank you note for all the big bouquets of roses, patches of petunias and gay geranium pots he has planted for the enjoyment of tourists and local residents.

Mr. Dodds has systematically weeded out dozens of ugly unattractive corners of the town by planting colorful annuals.

At the Picton fire hall a small plot of earth near the weight scales was beautified by a trellis and a rambler rose.

Picton Public Library now has window boxes filled with bright geranium blooms and the war memorial is planted with colorful beds of summer flowers.

By serving his community through his many small gardens Mr. Dodds has demonstrated the posey power of a single "flower child."

Town council and Picton merchants well might follow his example in improving local eyesores through planting flowers and shrubs.

The Queen Elizabeth Park overlooking Prince Harbor offers possibly the most scenic view in town but except for a few benches it is bare.

The small fountain there is pretty when its functional but for some unknown reason it is turned off most of the time.

A few small trees have been started in the park but it lacks the landscaping that could make it the prettiest spot in town. Shrubs and flowers should be added to bring this park into its own.

Public buildings in Picton, such as Shire Hall and the town offices could be made more attractive by outdoor planters filled with dwarf shrubs or geraniums. Even the old Prince Edward County court house might be "spruced up" with a colorful flower bed.

Trenton also ordered a second shaft ($150) in the event the other one of the two in the drive mechanism breaks. It's a good policy. Prepare for the worst, and hope for the best.

But that preparation is costly. The town is going to be "nickle and dimed" to death unless that span is soon levelled and a new one built. The phrase catches the sense of the situation but not the truth.

Nickels are $100 bills and dimes are $1,000 bills.

And their slow, steady flow from the town treasury is going to continue. The bridge, without a doubt, will have another heroic, making it near immobile and in need of repair.

New Bridge Best Choice

By AL ZABAS
Staff Reporter

Trenton last week took another step down the road to war, a war of attrition whose unwilling prize is the taxpayer's dollar.

And what was the war over this time? The Dundas St. bridge. Without the clash of cymbals, and without the roll of drums, with no ceremony at all, the rusty old span literally ground to a halt.

It malfunctioned. A shaft in the drive mechanism, twisted with age, snapped. Much like a stale pretzel, one assumes.

To say that as a result the swing section of the bridge was unusable is not true. It could be opened, but only with a touch of epithe applied to the rabbit's foot.

It's just too bad that rabbit's foot, or another one from a luckier rabbit, hadn't been buried deep in the taxpayer's purse, more commonly known as the town treasury. If that was the case, perhaps the town would not have been forced to spend any money to repair the rusty-bolt bearing span.

But there was no lucky charm and Trenton had to pay. Due to overtime wages and the rush nature of the job, the Trenton company that produced the replacement shaft had to be paid $1,500.

And this is where the war of attrition enters the picture.

That $1,500 is a small portion of what it will end up paying before it gets a new bridge linking the two halves of Dundas St.

It's a Cosy Enough Life in Ottawa—Thanks to Taxpayer and Federal Payroll

By RICHARD JACKSON

OTTAWA — There may be a recession in the rest of the country, but here in the National Capital the economy sails along serenely on an even keel.

This is not being written to arouse your passions against the ever-prospering bureaucracy, but to acknowledge your contribution — taxes, remember — to the Capital's continuing well-being.

It's not so much that Ottawa—Hull — officially now, proclaims the government, a two-city capital — is booming.

It isn't.

It is just that it is not hurting. The most up-to-date statistic indicating the Capital's economic stability is that for total value of department store sales.

It is up by 19 per cent, which, offsetting the same percentage of the inflation rate, leaves business as good this year as last.

Which is pretty good.

Insulation from the woes of the rest of the country is the Capital's economic safeguard.

This being almost a wholly-owned government town, the federal payroll provides the insulation.

It is strong and steady — people don't get laid off from the public service.'

It is more than that in fact — it's a growth industry.

A two-year growth. The size of the public itself increases and its salary rates rise.

In fact — and you won't like this one bit — economic difficulties in the rest of the country contribute to the continuing growth of the public service, even stimulate it.

More civil servants are needed to supervise unemployment insurance, more are required to process industrial incentive grants, to assess LIP and OFY programs, to analyse economic problems and search out possible solutions, to do the think tanks, and row the departmental dream-boats in which inventive mandarins conjure up new ways to spend more public money.

All these people live in Ottawa, get paid in Ottawa, and spend their money in Ottawa — except when they are sent down to Montreal for a high-life weekend — generating sizeable economic activity in the region.

Other — no public service — industries in the capital establish here because they want to sell to the federal government or are members of associations help in developing technology.

While all this makes for economic stability for residents of the Capital, it doesn't do much for the economic difficulties of those living in other parts of the country.

For it makes it more of a problem for the federal government economic policy-makers to realize the severity of the recession when it doesn't share them in the face every day.

It only figures that what things are cozy here — and they always are — recession is where seems to lack the reality of immediacy.

Perhaps the feds would be more concerned with the problems of recession if every day they saw firms in trouble, talked with businessmen struggling to cope with declining sales, and talked with people who had lost jobs they thought secure.

The basic economic policies of the feds might not change all that much.

But at least it might persuade the Bank of Canada and the Finance Department that a recession is something more than "a period of negative growth."

The last time the fat cat Capital experienced a recession it like-it-is in recession was way back in the days of former Conservative Prime Minister Richard Bedford Bennett.

As the depression deepened with the country-wide cry of "Dirty Thirties," R.B. Bennett, seeking to set an example of belt-tightening, shut down an entire federal agency — the old Department of the Interior — firing the staff out of hand.

The legacy he left still haunts the Conservatives here where public servants, with long memories, routinely vote Liberal.

Funny thing, though, despite the prosperity here, times are hard for collecting agencies.

Public service salaries can't be garnished for unpaid debts.

So John Morrison, National Capital regional manager of Collection Agencies, Limited, is able to rail:

"These deadbeat government people are just about impossible to collect from — they know where they stand, safe from garnishee, and they stand firmly."

Human Nature's Quirks

What's in it — or not in it — for me? This is a familiar attitude. More so perhaps today than ever before.

The Ideal of Brotherhood too is more of a pipe dream than reality, even though we may pay lip service one week in the year.

Nor do so-called Gentlemen's agreements count for much these days.

A local man has had some experience of this in recent months. He cites two examples involving auto collisions in which the damage was minor but nevertheless costly enough in terms of repair work.

In the first, his car was side-swiped by a vehicle backing up at the Liquor Store, a witness being his small daughter who was waiting in the car. The driver of the other car kept on going.

In the other incident, six months or trying to collect from a driver who plunged abruptly in downtown Belleville one winter's evening, last December, backed up and buckled the bumper and hood of his import, has come to nought.

A verbal agreement had been reached early in the year, the other driver to pay. There was a time and place, but he never showed up. A solicitors' letter was ignored, and when a subsequent attempt to collect through the other's insurance, he replied saying, in effect: "the other party ran into me."

As the insurance company explained in effect: "Without witnesses, how to prove otherwise . . . It's his word against yours."

Maybe times have changed. More than a decade has passed, says this citizen, since one day after work in another city he found the rear windshield of his car smashed. On the seat was the name and address and insurance company in the United States of a truck driver who, backing up, had caused the damage.

Today it's a case of "I'm all right, Jack . . . who cares what happens to the other guy?"

Government is Stingy With Research Money

By F. W. GROVER

OTTAWA — Just about the time that R. Keith Downey and Dr. Balder Stefanson were being hailed by the Royal Bank of Canada as outstanding Canadians for the achievements in rapeseed development, the deans of the eight faculties of agriculture and the three veterinary colleges lambasted the federal government for being stingy with money for research.

It is an old complaint. By about any yardstick you choose, Canadian expenditures on research and development are low. When compared against our affluent standard of living they are miniscule. The reasons are many and they have been discussed ad infinitum by inquiries and by parliamentary committees.

The major reason is that most of the major industries in Canada are foreign owned and the R and D is done in the parent country. (Anyone who has watched what a Canadian winter does to an automobile can make a good argument for moving some of the Big Three's research facilities north of the border.) There is also, unfortunately, a mind-set prevalent in Canada that feels there is something frightfully wrong about the research scientist whose life is his laboratory.

The Universities complained last April when Canada spent over $90 million a year on research while the clever chap who have to share less than $16 million. What annoys them more is that only one-third of Agriculture Canada's research funds are passed on to the universities for contracted work.

Dr. Downey dodged the question in a speech at the ceremony where he and Dr. Stefanson accepted their $50,000 prize. For a public servant it was an outspoken statement.

Canadian investment in research and development falls far short of what other develop ped nations consider essential for their survival . . . Canada only invests 1.3 to 1.4 per cent of our GNP in research — only about 4 per cent of U.S. efforts . . . the Senate Committee recommended that by 1980 we should be investing 2.5 per cent of GNP.

He suggested a Peter Principle for Canadian Science policy: "There is a direct relationship between the rate of knowledge accumulated in a particular field of endeavour and the degree of bureaucratic indecision."

But Dr. Downey did not go about entirely with the University dean's statement. He said they were making the right pitch but they were aiming it in the wrong direction.

To begin with, $90 million a year is not too generous when we consider the uptake of the research stations needed across Canada to deal with the varied crops and climatic conditions. Much of Agriculture Canada's research effort is the basic minimum required to keep ahead of disease and to give farmers the technology to keep up productivity in the face of continued urban migration.

Much of the research work the universities can and should do, the feds don't have will have to come from one level of government or another. It is unrealistic, however, to cut it out of the federal research budget of Agriculture Canada.

Dr. Downey whaled away time had been lost in the seven-year debate on scientific priorities. While he was pressed to see that food was given top priority about with energy, the short-term package type of financing under the new science policy was not suited to agriculture.

Ontario heard the pitch. Agriculture Minister William Stewart added $3 million to research spending and much of it will be contracted out. There is no evidence yet that anyone in Ottawa was listening.

'Dog' Days of Summer

It was Arnold Palmer, as we recall, who said a man must be fit to play professional golf in weather such as we are experiencing now.

There is little pleasure in these arid, airless days, unless you are a youngster and there is a pool handy. Even the folk over at Zwicker Island, with a bit of a breeze from the bay, seem to drag their feet.

Dennis T. Patrick Sears, whose first novel, The Lark in the Clear Air, was a Canadian best seller, says in his Kingston newspaper column that these are "dog days" — after the Roman theory about the dog star, Sirius, rising with the sun.

Sears says he retreats in such weather to the shrubbery, avoids those who talk about what a lovely day it is, lest he be tempted to sock it to them, and observes, with truth, that "ours is a harsh and frightful climate."

We recall a summer such as this in another community along the St. Lawrence. It hung on right into early September; then suddenly, one afternoon, the temperature dropped. The hot, enervating sun loosened its grip.

Bring on September, all too swiftly gone though it always is. Winter is aggravation of another kind, but at least one feels alive in that season of the year.

Law and Condominium Ownership

By VINCENT EGAN

Business and Consumer Affairs Analyst

Thomson News Service

"Condominium" means a certain type of property ownership. Any type of living accommodation — highrise apartments, townhouses or whatever—can qualify.

The essential characteristic of condominium ownership is that your unit belongs to you, and common property is shared with your co-owners.

Typically, the common property would be the grounds, parking area, recreational amenities and—in an apartment-type condominium—lobby, corridors and elevators.

Then there are "limited common elements" such as the individual's balcony, parking spot and storage space. The use of these is restricted to the unit owner, but they belong to the condominium corporation.

It's important for prospective condominium buyers to understand the distinction. If the interior wall belongs to the unit, for example, the owner has to pay for window-washing.

The guidance of a lawyer is just as essential in buying a condominium as in buying any other form of real property.

Your lawyer should ensure that you receive from the developer or condominium corporation such documents as the description of the unit, the declaration and bylaws of the corporation, the budget, trust agreement, a management contract if there is one, and a statement as to recreational facilities.

In most cases, management agreements run condominiums. "Attempts at self-management have been made, but with efficient than professional management." says Ontario's ministry of consumer and corporate relations in its newly-published booklet, Buying A Condominium.

Note that the condominium manager is entitled to enter your unit if necessary in order to carry out his work, whether the owner is present or not.

When you buy a condominium, you will need enough cash for the down payment, land transfer tax, lawyer's fees and a few miscellaneous items.

As a condominium owner, you will be required to pay regular mortgage and interest instalments, property taxes, a monthly contribution to maintenance fee and contribution to a reserve fund for emergency repairs, and utility bills.

The primary advantage of condominium ownership is financial. The old rule about economies of scale means that it is cheaper for several people to share the ownership of a given property than for individuals to buy houses independently.

Another advantage, as with apartment living, is the reduction or elimination of household chores — grass cutting, snow clearing, and maintenance of the house.

Disadvantages? Much the same as in any form of multi-family dwelling. Inadequate sound control is one of the most common annoyances.

And even though you own your home, your capital tied up in it, your freedom to do as you like with your property is restricted by the condominium agreement. You may be able to persuade your fellow-owners to alter a particular bylaw, but it's seldom easy.

If you are considering the purchase of a unit in a condominium that's already in operation, by all means talk to the people living there and get their opinions on construction, maintenance, noise and so on.

If the condominium you are buying is still in a new one, check the neighborhood carefully and try to assess its future possibilities.

There was something civilized and heart-warming in the redemption of John Profumo, whose political career was shattered in scandal in 1963 when he was Britain's war minister. His recent inclusion in the Queen's birthday honor list as a Commander of the Order of the British Empire salluted the fact that there is a way back; that society is prepared to recognize genuine contrition.

Teachers' Salaries

Editor,
The Intelligencer:

The recent rejection by Northumberland-Peterborough Separate Schools teachers of the school board's last offer of increases in salaries into sharp focus once again. The main complaint expressed by the disgruntled teachers rejected a 26 per cent increase in salary. I would like to know just how director Thomas arrived at the figure. If the 26 per cent includes increments which I strongly suspect it does — then the salary increase was in actuality somewhere between 20 and 23 per cent. Although this is more adequate, it is in fact greater than the Consumer Price Index (CPI) rise for the past year, this amount must be considered in terms of the teachers of this area — Northumberland-Newcastle, Hastings and Prince Edward — being at least 20 per cent behind the inflation rate, which has risen about 40 per cent since 1969. Hence, the board's offer contains a cost of living allowance (COLA) claim of only 12.7 and to this figure in clause effective at the end of the 1975-1977 term, the teachers were absolutely correct to demand a just premium for their professional services. No other profession has had its collective buying power so eroded. Teachers have had recent years as have teachers labboring under the Ministerial collaps. Now, teachers seek a militant stand for quality education.

A CONCERNED TEACHER.

U.S. Ties in Both Asia and Europe are Slackening in Wake of Recent Events

By JOHN D. HARBRON

Foreign Affairs Analyst

Thomson News Service

Are the allies of the United States around the world slipping away from their long American association and making their own new alignments and security plans?

Since the fall of Saigon this spring many nations, especially a smaller so-called "client states" of the U.S. in Asia, have indicated their desire to loosen ties with Washington.

Most prominent are Thailand and the Philippine Republic in South East Asia where American power has waned the most with the fall of the old Republic of South Vietnam.

Both countries have established diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China, the heads of both nations going to Peking to sign the agreement of recognition.

Both President Marcos of the Philippines and Thailand's prime minister have asked the Americans ultimately to remove their bases and in the short term to remove actual bomber and fighter aircraft.

Thailand was of course, a major bomber base for U.S. sweeps against Laos, North Vietnam and the Communist controlled patches of South Vietnam during the 60s and early 70s.

The Philippines were more critical. U.S. bases have existed in that unsettled country since Spanish-American War of 1898.

The Cavite naval base and the famous island of Corregidor, where U.S. troops in the Philippines held out against the invading Japanese for three months in early 1942, are ever-remembered in American history. So should be the American-Philippine connection.

But there are mixed times for sentiment. The defence of Corregidor and the support of Filipino alliance in guerrilla warfare which followed, are far back in history now.

Taiwan, that strongest of American allies in Asia, may develop its own nuclear bomb by 1980, a sign it will rely on its own not inconsiderable technology for protection against the avowed enemy of Communist China, that that technology came from the U.S.

And the American strategic jet fighters, currently the F-4s, have been withdrawn from that island country, leaving the American air ability to hit mainland China based far the first time since the long-ago Korean War.

In Western Europe, there are strong signs of weakness in the close German-American association, made during the cold war of the late 40s and by the US Air Force mounting of the Berlin Airlift of 1948-49.

The strength of West Germany's economy, with the United States has also been a result of the activities of U.S. multi-national corporations in the once-booming German economy and at the same time, the German international firms in the American economy.

These important economic relations have been in jeopardy, not because of events in Vietnam, but because of world recession and mounting attacks against multi-national concerns and their operations.

A post-war West German generation of youths has not only grown up, but has produced the 1968 generation of Germans, both far removed from memories of the cold war.

THE UNEXPLAINED

by Allen Spraggett

Egnarts Still Mystery to INFOR

ALLEN SPRAGGETT. ..

What's the "Egnarts"?

For one thing it's the word "Strange" spelled backwards. It's a term, coined by a group called the International Fortean Organization (INFOR), for any of the thousands of oddities they collect which don't fit in anywhere.

Fish falls from the sky? That's an egnarts.

Dozens of live frogs plummet from somewhere into somebody's swimming pool? That's an egnarts.

Something leaves weird marks in the snow for a distance of a hundred miles and the marks resemble those of neither man nor beast? That's an egnarts.

The Forteans are a bunch of open-minded skeptics who take their name from one Charles Fort, a brilliant, eccentric connoisseur of the unexplained and the bizarre who especially enjoyed poking fun at establishment science. Fort collected voluminous data from around the world (published in a string of books) describing weird things — and then laughed at science's contradictory attempts to explain them.

Modern Forteans are equally irreverent. From their headquarters in Arlington, Virginia, they tirelessly look for the things that embarrass science, the things that defy classifying.

Here's a collection of some fairly recent egnarts.

On January 22, 1974, the villagers in Llandrillo, Wales, in a rather desolate part of the country, were startled by a brilliant blue and green light in the sky and a huge explosion.

The popular theory was that a meteorite had hit the side of a nearby hill. The impact was sufficient to send out shock waves severe enough to be considered by scientists "an earth tremor" or minearthquake.

Yet in spite of intensive investigation, no meteorite trace of a meteorite ever evidence of its impact could be found. The entire area was combed by military personnel.

Result: Nothing.

Whatever it up the sky bluish-green and shook dishes off shelves for miles around was an egnarts.

On August 31, 1974, the wolves ran amok in the northwest corner of Spain. News reports said that local villagers had shot more than 40 of the animals in a week. There were accounts of sheep, calves and dogs being devoured by the wolves and farmers chased up trees.

This is very un-wolfike behavior. It's against all the rules, said the animal experts, for wolves to even approach human settlements in summer.

From Darwin, Australia came reports in February, 1974, that fish fell from the sky. Hundreds of small fish — mostly perch — rained down on farmers' fields 200 miles from the sea in Australia's Northern Territory.

Some scientists theorized that the fish had been sucked from the ocean by a tornado and blown inland, then dumped. Others, however, said they didn't believe a tornado could carry anything 200 miles

Besides, the fish-falls occurred three times in two weeks.

One scientist said: "Rains of fish have been reported from all over the world from time to time, but no convincing explanation has been given."

Exactly.

Fish - falls are an egnarts.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Bluegrass guitarist Lester Flatt underwent almost five hours of open-heart surgery Thursday, while across town funeral services were being conducted for country music artist George Morgan.

Flatt, 61, was reported resting comfortably in hospital following the operation, which consisted of implanting bypasses to arteries, doctors reported. Good blood flow in all grafts followed the operation.

Morgan, 50, a headliner at the Grand Ole Opry for 27 years, died earlier in the week of complications resulting from similar surgery.

The funeral mass for Morgan, 50, was attended by many country music people, including singers Johnny Cash and his wife June Carter Cash.

MOSCOW (Reuter) — The ninth Moscow Film Festival opened Thursday with nearly forty countries represented. Although 20th Century Fox and Columbia are sending short documentary films for unofficial showing, the American Motion Picture Association declined the formal invitation on financial grounds, a Soviet cinema official entry from the official said last Monday.

Sebaceous Cysts Easily Removed

By C. C. THOSTESON, MD

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I have a sebaceous cyst which protrudes right smack in the center of my forehead. It is about a half-inch in diameter and very noticeable.

I have had it for several years and always thought it would disappear, dissolve by itself, but I guess I was mistaken. I have now become very conscious of this ugly blemish. Can you advise a remedy or treatment to eradicate it?—M.

Large sebaceous cysts, if that is what you have, may occur on any part of the body except on the soles or palms.

They can range in size from tiny specks (whiteheads are sebaceous cysts) to those the size you describe, or even larger. They are called sebaceous cysts because they are caused by excessive secretion of the tiny sebaceous glands in the skin.

Surgical removal would seem to be the only answer for you, and this is generally a minor procedure that can be done in the physician's office. Since yours is located in such a prominent spot, and you are sensitive about it, I suggest you visit a dermatologist who could advise you on your specific case. Incidentally, they are benign.

Dear Dr. Thostesen: I am a male, 21 years old. All of my life I have been healthy. Recently, however, I was overwhelmed with a bad heartburn and my heart started beating rapidly and pounding. This lasted for 15 or 20 minutes.

I have had a number of these incidents lately. My doctor gave me some pills for it, which have helped.

What is the cause of these spells? What is the cure? Is this a danger sign of heart trouble? Can a fast heart be fatal? Should a person have tests run in a hospital?—A. P.

I'll take each question in the order asked.

Such spells can be caused by anxiety, fatigue, or excessive use of such things as tobacco, coffee, tea, etc.

Treatment usually involves use of sedatives at bedtime or medication to combat the heartburn distress.

Usually, there is no underlying heart disease. Nonetheless, this rhythm disturbance can occur with heart trouble, and an electrocardiogram and blood-pressure tests are in order as well as one for thyroid function.

Such conditions are rarely fatal. If there is an underlying heart disease, then that is a different matter, and I assume from your letter that you have been checked and found normal in that respect.

Most evaluation of heart-rhythm irregularities can be done in the doctor's office. Special chemical tests for thyroid function are done more efficiently in a laboratory for such purposes, or in a hospital.

The Consumer — Sharon Airhart

Getting Your Money's Worth

If consumers often don't get what they pay for, is the converse also true? Have you ever gotten more than your money's worth?

One woman — a fellow worker here at the paper — got more! She felt her money's worth last week when she picked up a pair of knee-high nylon stockings for 99 cents at a supermarket chain store. She got about three feet more than her money's worth. Her "knee-highs" were just about armpit high.

The question is, did she get what she paid for?

Getting more than you paid for can be irritating. After paying $2.50 a person to see "Blazing Saddles" at the drive-in recently, I got more than I paid for when, between features, two automobile advertisements were shown on the screen. I confess it's been a long long time since I've been to a drive-in — they seem to be the preserve of teen-agers and parents with tiny children — so I found the advertisements a little shocking. I could be wrong, but once I've paid for the entertainment in cash I don't want to "pay" again by being the captive and unwilling audience for advertisements.

After all, television has always been "free" because sponsors pay for your attention while they promote their products. But since you're already paying for the entertainment, why should you have to watch advertisements at the drive-in?

(For what it's worth, I think it's fair to point out that in Britain, movie theatres regularly screen as much as 15 minutes of advertisements between features.

Camping season brings with it the need for common sense application of safety rules inside or near the tent. Tents are a textile article and are flammable. Children's cotton tents will ignite and burn within a few minutes and the paraffin treatment some tents have as waterproofing makes them even more flammable. It's a good idea to buy self-flame retardent tents but remember even they will burn.

Be sure to build camp fires several yards and downwind from the tent. Don't use open flames in or near the tent, including cooking utensils. Have a plan of action in case of fire and be sure children are aware of special fire dangers inside tents.

Saving Sealers Won't Make You Rich

Unless you've got an old-fashioned canning jar sporting a beaver facing left, don't plan to make a lot of money on the sale of the sealers in your basement or attic.

In fact, the sealers are probably more valuable to home canners than to collectors who are very selective in the jars they buy.

Ruth and John Huffman, antique dealers with a shop next to their home east of Belleville on Highway 2, explain that they get two or three telephone calls a week from hopeful sealer sellers who've decided they have a gold mine in the basement.

"When you tell them only a very few are worth anything, they won't believe you," John Huffman says.

Calls come into the shop — and most likely other antique shops in the area — from the city and surrounding rural areas.

"Most often they come from someone who has seen a sealer sold for a lot of money at an auction and believes he has dozens of similar sealers packed away," Ruth Huffman says. "But in fact they just look alike to the untrained eye."

What distinguishes the valuable sealer from the ordinary is, of course, rarity.

"There are valuable sealers, good sealers," Ruth Huffman says. "But, for example, there were 27 different kinds of Mason sealers made and only three or four have any value."

Sealer crown sealers are small moulded with a tall narrow crown or have no dots around the crown, or feature a crown with a bulge or a crown with a ring.

"Even those certainly won't make you rich," she explains. Mrs. Huffman said she goes through 500 sealers before finding a saleable one.

The most common sealers are mason, crown, corona and ball. Some are popular with tourists from the United States because they often say "made in Canada."

What about sealers which were produced by other manufacturers?

Well, any amber sealer might be worth something: an amber left-handed beaver is currently valued at about $400.

Others you might be able to sell to a collector include sealers with a picture of King Edward, with a beehive or the words "pussy" or "star" or "rose" on them, "Darling" or "dexter" sealers are also collectable.

As for the rest of the sealers in the basement or attic, the only way you're likely to make any money on them is to clean them up, fill them with food and cut down on next winter's grocery bills.

Husband 'Shunned' by Wife

CARLISLE, Pa. (AP) Farmer Robert Bear says he last saw his wife in February but she refused to speak to him.

"I said, 'Good morning,' and took her picture. She did like that," says Bear, who has been excommunicated from the Reform Mennonite Church and is the subject of a church practice called "shunning," where he is avoided by all church members, including his family.

Bear, 46, also told reporters Tuesday he tried to see his six children last winter. He went to his in-laws' home in Camp Hill. "My wife didn't meet me at the door," the Carlisle farmer said. "He said it made my wife so nervous she took the children away."

Bear, married for 13 years, says he was living an idyllic life on his corn and potato farm with his family when he decided to speak out against Reform Mennonite doctrine that claimed the church was the only pure faith.

He said his attacks resulted in his excommunication and shunning. His wife moved the couple's children out of their farmhouse.

Bear tried unsuccessfully to sue the church in the local courts. The case was not heard. But on Monday the state Supreme Court, citing that marriage may be governed by the state and not entirely by the church, ordered the Cumberland County court to hear the case.

"I would think we will follow this until it is finished. I want my wife and children back," Bear say .

Will his wife return if the courts decide shunning is unconstitutional? Bear's wife has not been available to answer.

But I'm hoping that she realizes she has done wrong," Bear says. "She is a victim of her culture. They believe that if they are excommunicated they are damned to hell. That's what my wife and children believe, that I am damned to hell."

Bear says he knew his wife, Ruth, in-law, was a great sister. They both grew up near Boiling Springs and were raised in the form Mennonite Church, probably the most stringent of 20 Mennonite sects.

Books By And About Women

THE MYSTERY OF EMILY DICKINSON By Laura Benet.

The author, a poet herself —Bridge of a Single Hair" — has delved deeply into the character and the mystery that forever hovered over this 19th century poet.

Some years ago Miss Benet wrote a novel about Emily Dickinson; evidently the ties were too strong to be broken for this new biography brings a fresh appraisal of this delightful personality. Reared in a stern, New England household. Emily never lost her own individuality. Through some of her letters to family and friends, one uncovers her sensitivity for others, her deep affection; also, her search for some less frightening approach to religion than those harsh doctrines of eternal punishment set forth in her father's church.

A forerunner of the modern poet, she was admonished by her critics to use the accepted forms of that day; that her verse was "too different" for publication. Even though she sought criticism of her work, she never followed suggestions for change. "When my thought is undressed, I can make the distinction; but when I put them in the gown, they look alike and numb."

Though shy as a girl, she was endowed with a charming wit. She left Amherst for occasional trips to Philadelphia but this tendency to withdraw increased with the years. At first her many interests centered at home: her writing, her music, flowers to attend, her big companionable dog, her family and friends — but when she met the "man of mystery" in Philadelphia and renounced that love, she wrote: "This cool secret is my own society — Then shuts the door." She did not shut that door and became more aloft more of a recluse. The identity of "the man" is firmly established and unravels this mystery.

To read this biography is to more fully appreciate Emily Dickinson's talents as a woman, as a friend, and as a writer.

Eskimos 'Cancer Prone'

OTTAWA (CP) — Eskimos are twice as prone to cancer as other Canadians and this may be caused by their acceptance of North American lifestyles, says an Edmonton doctor.

Heavy smoking, chemic bronchitis, potentially cancerous air pollutants and radiation from observ-ground nuclear testing may all be causes of their unusually high cancer rate, says Dr. Oliver Schaefer of the northern medical research unit of Charles Camsell Hospital.

Writing in the Canadian Medical Association Journal, he says a study of Eskimo medical records from 1949 to 1974 shows a sharp increase in the rate of cancer as the Eskimos come in contact with, and adopt, white culture.

The most startling findings were that Eskimo men have 72 times and women 181 times the chance of dying of cancer of the salivary glands and 155 and 31 times as much chance of dying of cancer of the nose and throat.

"The excess in cancer mortality is greatest at ages 45 to 64 years, and for women in this age group in the central Arctic the excess is nine times that found for all Canadians," he said.

Eskimo women, according to his study, have twice the chance of dying of cervical cancer as other Canadian women and Dr. Schaefer thinks their shift to "Western" ways encouraged promiscuity and the chance of contracting venereal infections which some doctors blame for cancer of the cervix.

Breast cancer, on the other hand, is only one-tenth as common in Eskimo women. Dr. Schaefer feels this may be because they breast feed their children longer.

Lung cancer claims twice as many Eskimo men and 13 times as many Eskimo women. Dr. Schaefer says the normal heavy smoking and bronchial problems may be the normal body mechanism for removing potentially cancerous air pollutants.

Dr. Schaefer also speculated that above-ground nuclear testing may have put fall fallout in lichen, a plant eaten by caribou, which is the Eskimo meat of the Eskimo. The increased cancer rate in Eskimos may make them more cancer prone, he said.

The Experts Say

Novice Canners—Start with Fruit

OTTAWA (CP) — The wave of popularity in home gardening due to the higher cost of grocery bills is prompting many Canadians to preserve the luscious produce out of their gardens.

Leonore Newman, home economist in the food advisory services, Agriculture Canada, provides some recommendations for canning produce, with tips especially useful for the novice in the home preserving field.

"For those who are inexperienced in the art of preserving food at home, it would be wise to start with fruits," she suggested, because "fruits are easy to can."

Miss Newman said all that is required is freshly picked fruit and a boiling water bath in which to process it.

"Use almost any large kettle with a rack and a tight-fitting lid," she said, "so long as it is deep enough to allow a rack and a tight-fitting lid. It must be deep enough to allow at least two inches of boiling water over the top of the 'sealed' containers."

This method, she said, is recommended for fruits and tomatoes, because of their natural acidity. The temperature reached in a boiling bath is high enough to destroy spoilage organisms.

Miss Newman said that with vegetables, home canning is a little more complex.

"Except for tomatoes which can be processed in a boiling water bath," she said, "all other vegetables need to be canned in a pressure canner."

She added: "Most vegetables contain little acid and need the high temperature that can only be obtained in a pressure canner to destroy bacteria, yeasts and moulds that are present in the air, water and soil.

Miss Newman warned against using the open-kettle method in which food is cooked for a few minutes but not given further processing and sealing.

"There is a chance of contamination when the jars are open-kettle," she said.

It is wise, the home economist said, to buy airtight canning jars to keep out spoilage organisms after processing.

"A danger of food poisoning and possible botulism exists in improperly processed low-acid vegetables in airtight containers," she said. "As a safeguard against botulism, vegetables, except tomatoes, should be boiled 10 minutes before tasting."

She cautioned that any home-canned food that looks abnormal, foams, spurts or has an off-odor should be destroyed in such a way that it cannot be picked up by children or animals.

Nursing in the Park

'Indecent' Behaviour Charged

MIAMI (AP) — Three mothers have been tossed out of a public park for allegedly violating the city's decency ordinance by breast-feeding their infants.

Luanne Bernard, Penny Ward and June Donally said Sunday they were asked to leave a city park last Thursday by a ranger who told them he had received complaints about the breast-feeding.

The mothers said they are enlisting the support of local women's rights leaders in their fight against the bon.

"What we do when we nurse a child is anything but indecent," said Mrs. Recicar. "It doesn't involve removing any clothing and we are very discreet about it.

"I've nursed at church with no problems and in restaurants, too," she said. "The people who complained, if anyone did, probably raise their kids to think that breasts aren't for anything other than display in Playboy Magazine."

Mayor Maurice Ferre said he had no objections to the public nursing.

Ann Landers

Frank Has a Hang-up

Dear Ann Landers: When you spoke in Racine, Wis., you said 30 years of writing the column has made you zombie shock-proof. I hope so. My story is unusual, to say the least.

Frank (made-up name) and I have been married three years. He is in an 8 to 5 job. I know he loves me and I am crazy about him, but he has a peculiar hang-up about making love. Frank simply cannot perform in bed, like a normal person. It has to be on the front porch, the back yard, on the roof, on a beach, or in the woods. Several times, drinking beer from a party, Frank has asked me to undress in his car and walk into the house nude. We live in a residential area.

I have always complied with his wishes but I'm scared to death the neighbors might see me. I think Frank's requests are unnatural and childish. I try hard to please him because I love the guy but he is becoming more demanding and I don't know what do to about it. Can you help? — S.O.S.

Dear S.O.S.: If the police see you walking nude from the car to the house, you could be arrested.

Tell Frank no more indecent exposure in public. The guy sounds bananas. Anyone who needs the element of high risk mixed in with his sexual gratification also needs counseling.

Dear Ann: This is for the 13-year-old who couldn't get up in the morning for school, but was wide-eyed at midnight.

Years ago, when I returned to the workin' world, I ate little for breakfast, a light lunch and a heavy meal in the evening. Before supper I was exhausted. Less than an hour after I ATE I was so revved up I could work until midnight. When morning came I was tired.

Last year my husband had to leave on an early-morning business trip. He suggested I eat a big breakfast with him at the airport. That day I had a light lunch and a light supper. By 10 o'clock I was ready for bed. The next morning I was raarin' to go. I've been on that same eating schedule ever since and I am never tired.

Now I realize my body wasn't getting enough nourishment in the morning to carry me through the day. I'll bet if that 13-year-old will eat a big breakfast and a light lunch and supper, he'll be able to sleep at night and jump out of bed in the morning raring to go.—Dilda.

Dear Dilda: Many people wrote to suggest a change in diet — especially that "ol' Sleeph Head" lay off carbonated drinks after supper

The one-piece swim-suit and the brief bikinis are are what fashion experts say women of Britain will wear to summer beaches. One-piece Swim Suits Make New Come Back

LONDON (CP) — Bathing suits for this season in Britain features a come-back for the one-piece swim-suit and more ultra brief bikinis.

The one-piece suit highlights brilliant colorings, fine lustrous fabrics, centre prints and daring shapes.

The fabrics saved on the bikini are being used for co-ordinates and cover-ups with the tiny bikinis.

The bikini itself, called a tanga, has briefs cut away to a G-string and the bra reduced to the shines of triangular cups. Some bikinis have the cups paired away at the sides and inbarred at centre. Slide-along bra styles are set on narrow straps and some two-pieces are triangles of fabric based on the loin-cloth style of Latin American Indians.

Bare shouldered tops are back on the beach, with bras that have tuck-away straps when swimming in the water. Bra shapes are soft, relying on a single dart or cut for shape.

For more cover on the beach, one can buy two-pieces, just like Betty Grable used to wear before the bikini was invented. The two-piece has the halter-neck bra with boxer shorts. More women will be able to wear the style because of its deeper cut pants and cup sizing for bikini bra tops.

The one-piece swim-suit, with daring front plunges and cut-away bras with bare backs and sides, often are part of a complete co-ordinated beach wardrobe. There are matching wraps, skirts, tops and long dresses for after-swim and dining and dancing, with necklines matching the swim-suit underneath.

High shine tricot fabrics with Lycra, give a smooth, lustrous look to the suit this season with colors ranging from orange, lemon and lime to violet and fuschia.

The British night-wear company Kayser is moving into beach and cruise-wear for the first time. It features Playmates, a beach-wear in luxury, plain and printed towelling and Leisure Life, cruise-wear styles in simple fabrics.

There are brief tops teamed with leg wrap skirts, backless "terrace" dresses, bikini sets with matching hats and coordinated halter neck dresses, both short and ankle length.

Brettles, another English manufacturer, makes a St. Tropez-style "curtain" bra bikini, a slip of material over the breasts with a brief bikini. They also feature one-piece suits this summer in ultra-fine nylon jersey, with a draped bodice and halter neckline bras and clip-front fastening, teamed with buckled, belted "little boy" boxer briefs.

I hope the lad sees this letter and takes your advice.

Dear Ann Landers: I was annoyed by the daughter who said she wouldn't permit her mother to be cremated. I want to be cremated also and I think the decision should be up to the individual. If it takes a plot of ground and marker for people to remember me, then I'm not worth remembering.

What I NEED to know is this: If I should die first, since my husband wants a conventional burial with a casket and the works, is there any reason why my ashes could not be placed in the casket with him? —Ella

Dear Ella: Probably not, but each cemetery has its own regulations. Check it out. Some cemeteries insist that each individual have his own plot.

McGibbon Still 'Raring to Go' As Lieutenant-Governor

TORONTO (CP) — After 14 months as Ontario's first woman lieutenant-governor, Pauline McGibbon says she's raring to go.

After 59 trips, 53 receptions, 51 media interviews, 11,272 persons entertained and 13,412 documents signed, only three things have shocked her—the amount of work, necessity for security and the fact her friends no longer know how to ask her out for a drink.

But she has managed to adjust to the workload and the security provided by the Ontario Provincial Police. Even her private social life, though narrower, is more normal.

"I just tell them (friends) to invite my husband Don and tell him to bring his girlfriend. Then they and I both hope he brings me."

She says her husband, whom years ago at a Sarnia winner roast, also has ... well, not recently retired as treasurer of Imperial Oil Ltd. to back her up during her five-year tenure, but retained his position on the board spent too many years on the other side of the fence . . . waiting to be introduced to a lieutenant-governor... nervous and tongue-tied. It's funny, now that I'm in this position, I don't know why people are so intimidated by it," she says.

She and her husband still live in their Toronto penthouse apartment, but after talking to neighbors on the same floor, police locked off the elevator at the floor below, and residents now need special keys to reach apartments.

She was the highlight of this year was meeting the Queen of regents of Victoria College and directorship of a Toronto trust company.

"Last year was very hectic and I thought 1975 would be lighter. I forgot, however, that this was International Women's Year and I've been blitzed with invitations."

Out of her most popular speeches deals with the role of the lieutenant-governor, since many, including herself before she was appointed, have absolutely no idea what the job entails.

Her workday runs from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. with lunch at her desk examining speaking invitations. She says she has relative freedom to choose her invitations, although some are "musts."

Before her investiture, she says she was not looking forward to the rigorous protocol rules such as one that says the lieutenant-governor is last in and first out at functions.

"Good Lord, you have to be flexible about these things. I've lost too many years on the Mother, who when they met, said simply: 'I hear you're the first.'

She is determined to make good in a job traditionally filled by men.

"The pressure is always there. If I do well, then some other woman might get a chance . . . I so much don't want to let womanhood down."

Lots of sleep, vitamins, a good sense of humor and especially a love of people are her ingredients for success, she says.

"All people, wee ones and tall ones. You simply have to love them or you could never survive in this job. And, as for a sense of humor, it's a must.

New Bishop of Nova Scotia Seeks to Shun Holy Huddle

HALIFAX (CP)—Rt. Rev. George P. Arnold, who in September will become bishop of the mother diocese of the Anglican Church in Canada, is a man who concedes that the episcopate is "not a job most persons would covet because of its responsibilities."

The 60-year-old coadjutor of the Diocese of Nova Scotia has strong ideas on his coming role in the church, especially with a view to relieving spiritual and administrative control.

Bishop Arnold, a native of Mulgrave, N.S., was elected coadjutor at the 102rd synod of the diocese and Sept. 1 will succeed Most Rev. W. W. Davis, 10th Bishop of Nova Scotia and Metropolitan of the Ecclesiastical Province of Canada since 1972.

Arnold individual brings "his own inclination" to the episcopate, Bishop Arnold said in an interview. His predecessor had been noted for his pastoral abilities and the 9th bishop had "most able talents" in administration.

It was vitally important for the diocese and laity to be willing to share the responsibilities of the diocese-something that made the sometimes lonely duties of the episcopate "bearable and possible."

"In my own judgment, you can't stop the bishop of his administrative function," he said.

There was a relationship between the two elements of pastoral and administrative concerns "which are complementary as well as sometimes divisive."

He once told a church committee the only office he could hope to be elected to as a clergyman was the bishopric, since no one would want him at his age, as a parish priest.

He smiled as he mused as to why the diocese would want "a dawdling old chap of 60 as coadjutor."

But his constituents, Anglicans from Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, both lay and clergy, voted overwhelmingly in his favor. In fact his selection was the first time in the history of the diocese that a bishop had been chosen on the first ballot.

He is not new to a bishop's work but presumes he will be able to assume the diocesan lead without a suffragan, a position he has held since 1967, until sometime in his term.

He was responsible for episcopal duties and other program such as education and community work—"a difficult combination. Some of the hat stayed on the other hat off the head."

"You can't combine these two."

Bishop Arnold will be elevated at what he calls a very interesting stage of the diocese, with work continuing on untangling some of the bureaucratic management of the church. He would like to "free up our structures so that we can function better as a community of faith."

But he believes that "good relations are more important than structures" and good relationships can make bad structures work.

Bishop Arnold, grandson of an Anglican priest and son of Ven. A. F. Arnold, archdeacon of Cape Breton, has to keep two elements in harmony within the church—the social activists of the 1960s and those who have looked inward, searching, since that time.

He hopes both elements can be kept in focus and that the church prevents itself from becoming "a lady huddle."

He looks forward to his work but can't help recalling the words of a friend with a sense of retributive justice, who once told him:

"Anyone who wants to be a bishop, deserves to be a bishop."

Shepherd's Life Key To Interpreting Psalm

By
Dr. GORDON C. SMYTH

The 23rd Psalm is one of the most beloved parts of the Bible. It is to be interpreted by reference to the absolutes life, just such a life as David lived before becoming king in 1016 B.C.

The Psalm is best interpreted by reference to the ministry of Jesus and to his role recorded in the 10th chapter of John's Gospel. Early Christians covered walls of Roman catacombs with the figure of a Shepherd.

"The Lord is my shepherd. I shall not want." God can supply a vast universe now at the same time germinate a single seed, life is a living, personal God.

"He makes me lie down in green pastures. He leads me beside still waters; he restores my soul." In the land of the Bible, a shepherd goes ahead of his flock. One marvels at the energy and poise of some animals. Their open secret is in daily prayer and daily meditation on the Bible, spiritual literature.

"He leads me in paths of righteousness for his name's sake." The shepherd's reputation has always been at stake in the handling of his sheep. Modern values tend to be distorted by the pathological reaction to Puritanism and by the mingling of different cultures. While Jesus was an Oriental, his Gospel has had a universal appeal. He can lead us better than anybody else.

"Even though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I fear no evil; for thou art with me."

A certain spot in the Holy Land is actually called such a valley. It is a treacherous defile. But who has not had a strong feeling at times that his life possessed a watchful, guarding Providence? Think back. Be grateful.

On that basis, let us, with the Psalmist, contemplate the future with confidence. "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

Dr. Leslie D. Weatherhead tells of a little girl who was asked to repeat the 23rd Psalm. The words were not memory. But in her mirror was a truth. She began: "The Lord is my shepherd, that's all I want."

When you and I can truly say that, both in present experience and anticipation, we "dwell in the house of the Lord". All we desire or need is there. For we are the people of God's pasture ,and the sheep of Christ's hand.

We're Pro Sex Say Mormons

NEW YORK (AP) — Mormons esteem sexual rules in regard to sex but they also esteem sex. In fact they maintain that upholding clear-cut disciplines about it enhances the goodness of sexual union itself and constitutes a particularly prized gift.

"You bet, we're pro-sex," says Ruth Funk, who as general president of the Young Women of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormons) supervises a vigorous wide-ranging program for 180,000 single, young women.

"Sex is one of the most beautiful aspects of life, the ultimate expression of human love in its spiritual dimension," she says. "It's a sacred act, the divine spark of our existence that magnifies our capabilities beyond self."

However, Mormons hold that to give it that special value demands special commitment, marriage; and also the avoidance of premarital sex that puts less significant on it and consequently downgrades it.

To use it in such casually slighting ways is to rob it of its true meaning, Mrs. Funk said. In an interview, She said that a spreading modern pattern among youth of "free sex" without commitment to marriage and family is cheapening sex, is basically anti-sex and destructive of its values.

"Much of the world is coming to feel that it's just another biological, physical function without its sacramental, psychological and emotional effects," she said. "That's where the tragedy lies. It's making for an amoral society without standards. It's taking one of the joys and purposes of life, one of the greatest ties to the Divine and putting it on a mere physiological, almost animal base."

To Mormons, however, the sexual union of man and woman through marriage and children has such exceling worth that it nurtures not only this life on earth but potentially a future life in heaven. Weddings in Mormon temples are for all eternity.

"When you see marriage for eternity, you look at it through different eyes," said Mrs. Funk of Salt Lake City, who directs a year-round program for young women of character building and leadership training and development of talents.

The objective is "self-mastery and self-discipline and the self-respect that comes through these disciplines," she said.

Throughout the process, the strict standard forbids premarital sex, but encourages marriage and family life in social settings, but in work and various types of experiences. At the church's Brigham Young University, premarital sex is almost a summary expulsion. Studies indicate Mormon training results in comparatively fewer cases of it. Also, the most recent annual figures for Utah show a divorce rate for the general population of 4.64 per cent but only 1.46 per cent for marriages sealed in Mormon temples, a form of marriage increasing among members.

Mrs. Funk, a mother of four and onetime high school choral director, said the modern trend toward abandoning standards of premarital chastity is undermining the moral fibre of the marriage covenant. "Many young people are seeking instant gratification," she said. "But it's hollow and can only cause serious wounds. These agonizing feelings, hidden deep down, can break out again, long after a marriage, and destroy a relationship."

Spot Secretive

CARP, Ont. (CP) — The Diefenbunker has been called one of the most secret spots in the country, 21 miles west of Ottawa. The large $20 million underground complex was built in the 1960s to house former prime minister Diefenbaker if nuclear war broke out. The complex still operates but not under the previous maximum security.

Government Concerts

TORONTO (CP) — Queen's Park, home of Ontario's provincial legislature, will come alive this summer each Wednesday night with concerts on the front lawn. Minister of Culture and Recreation Robert Welch said: "The summer program is designed to allow families to gather and picnic on Ontario's front lawn while enjoying what we hope will be pleasant and relaxing entertainment after work."

Kiwanians Pick Peas

PICTON — Picton Kiwanians this month harvested 14 acres of peas for sale as a fund raising project.

The pea crop yield weighed in at 16,000 pounds and is a first in fund raising for Kiwanians here.

The project was spearheaded by Christopher Lockyer who assisted in planting and harvesting the peas.

Township Gets Grant

PICTON — South Marysburg Township will receive a supplementary subsidy of $4,200 to assist with the cost of rebuilding of certain roads and in the priming of a three-quarter mile stretch of road.

Announcement of the "subsidy was made this week by James Taylor, MPP Prince Edward-Lennox, from his office in Queen's Park.

Fashion Big Business

PICTON — There will be new windows on Main Street this summer as two more women's clothing shops open in Picton.

The Orient Boutique managed by Ved Sethi opened in the Armory Mall in May. The shop specializing in Indian clothing, will move to Main Street in August filling a vacant store near the Pro Hardware centre.

The Fashion Gallery, a women's wear shop to be operated by Herman and Betty Zwilling of Picton also will open in August in a renovated shop near the Salvation Army Citadel on Main Street.

Picton Youth Get Centre To Fill Summer Months

By MARG HAYLOCK
Staff Reporter

PICTON — A youth activities centre for Prince Edward County students will open Monday evening, July 14, at Picton fairgrounds.

Co-sponsored by the Picton recreation committee and the ministry of culture and recreation, recreation and sports bureau the centre will remain open several nights each week.

The centre, run through the Experience '75 program, offers a wide variety of games, sports and other activities for teens and pre-teens.

Program co-ordinator Connie Trumble said Friday the activities are divided into three categories, community and social, sports and fitness and social outings.

A building at the Picton fairgrounds has been opened as headquarters for the activity centre and here students are invited to play cards, chess or checkers and ping pong. Outdoor activities include "cosme" hockey and croquinole.

Three Prince Edward County students, Miss Trumble, Donna McNeil and Joe Hache are in charge of the youth centre programs.

While Miss Trumble co-ordinates events, Donna McNeil plans for day camps and other outings, Joe Hache is in charge of sports.

Several special events are planned this summer including a roller skate-a-thon, a hay ride and a dance for elementary school students.

When proceeds from the roller skate-a-thon are collected half of the money will be donated to the community swimming pool fund and the balance used to sponsor a teen dance.

Board Meets Monday

BLOOMFIELD — The Prince Edward County Board of Education will meet Monday, July 14 at 8 p.m. in the board offices here.

A report by the director of education, John McNeil, a business administrator's report and a maintenance supervisor's report are included on the agenda for this regular monthly meeting of trustees.

Crane Damaged

Damage might run as high as $5,000 to the motor of a mobile crane owned by Fiable Crane Rental Ltd. at 68 West Dundas St. here after someone disconnected a radiator hose sometime Thursday night or Friday morning.

City police said today the crane was driven from the city out of the city early Friday when it overheated and the cause was found.

Vandals Go on Window Smashing Spree

Vandals were out in force in the city overnight, inflicting unwanted damage at a fried chicken outlet, two houses and a bus stop, police said today.

Chief Douglas Crossley said homes at 18 and 48 Dunbar St. had rocks thrown through windows within a 40-minute span Friday evening.

And at 1:52 a.m. today, someone smashed a pane of glass at a new bus stop on the corner of Haig Rd. and East Bridge St.

Finally, while on patrol at 6:07 a.m. today, a patrolman discovered a front window broken at the Blue Barn Restaurant on West College St. at a value of $150. Total damage is estimated at $225.

Chief Crossley said acts of vandalism have been increasing over the years. He said 25 years ago, there were only three reported cases in th city but last year there were just over 700. "It seems to be a social problem . . . why are these people doing it," he commented.

Harbor Officials Back Yacht Basin Suggestion

By HARRY MULHALL
Staff Reporter

The possibility of creating a yacht basin and docking facility for small boats east of the city's harbor was presented Belleville Harbour Commission Friday.

The idea is included among tentative suggestions in the interim Quinte Bayfront Study now being circulated among community agencies for comment.

The study — calling for a long-range recreational development plan for the mouth of Quinte waterfront in the Belleville area — was commissioned by the Moira River Conservation Authority (MRCA).

The interim report — containing suggestions for development to be studied by municipal and community groups — was presented Tuesday to the MRCA's water control advisory committee.

The area involved extends from Thurlow Township to the Aiken's Road area of Sidney Township, with Belleville's waterfront facilities as a centrepiece.

The interim report is to spark discussion of development possibilities which will be considered before the final study is drafted later this year.

The harbor commission was the first local organization to view the proposals since their introduction to the MRCA committee by Toronto consultant Ralph Crysler.

The suggestions stress the need for more docking space in the city of Belleville.

They include possible creation of a yacht facility in the basin east of the present government dock. The area now is not used for commercial shipping.

Harbor Master Don Barrett said the commission appeared "quite impressed" and seemed "most favorable" to such a possible development.

Another suggestion for creating dockage at West Zwick's Park lagoon — raised objections from commission members who felt it might clash with greenbelt usage of the shoreline park, said Mr. Barrett.

Charges Laid In Shooting

BANCROFT — A 19-year-old Trenton youth has been charged with criminal negligence and with the dangerous use of fire-arms in connection with the shooting death of a 17-year-old Bancroft youth last Monday.

Ontario Provincial Police at Bancroft have identified the youth charged as Steven Kelly. He was charged following a crown attorney's examination Friday. No trial date has been set.

A police spokesman said George Vincent Lake Jr. was struck in the head by a bullet from a 22-calibre rifle while he was in a shed behind his father's house here during a target practice. He died shortly after in Bancroft Red Cross Hospital.

The Work's Dangerous But the Pay's Good

By COLIN BRUCE
Staff Reporter

For Toronto construction worker Michele Melarango, going to work means 100 feet straight up.

One step at a time, Michele as he is called by fellow workers, clambers up 100 steps to a cubicle at the summit of the tower crane poised at the centre of the Century Place project.

From his perch he controls the arm of the metal monster as it swings construction materials about the $5 million construction site.

At one time Michele worked on the ground as a carpenter but said Friday he's been working on cranes for the past seven years.

"It's a dangerous job," he said. "Not for me but for the men on the ground."

"Because of that, I don't like the job that much," said the operator.

Asked why he continued in his profession, Michele grinned and said "the money's good — $9.60 an hour."

The worst time for working is when there's a wind, he said. "The cables begin to blow around and there isn't much you can do to control it."

"I've never been involved in an accident but it still bothers me," said Michele.

Parker In Court Monday

Lynn William Parker, 21, of 230A West Moira St. in Belleville, charged in connection with the rape of a 22-year-old Chatham woman here Thursday, will appear in provincial court here Monday.

A spokesman for the Crown attorney's office here said Parker "is in custody as a result of the bail hearing" held at the county courthouse here Friday.

The spokesman said Parker has been charged with one count of rape. City police originally said Friday he had been charged with two counts.

The incident occurred at about 5 p.m. near a bed path in a wooded area between Tracey St. and Bell Blvd.

Enthroned!

Capricious Steven Webster sits on the lap of Claudia Scuccata, 11, during the Trenton playground program day-long outing in Hanna Park Friday. The five-year-old is one of 260 children to register in five town playgrounds for the six-week summer program. Over 120 children attended the outing yesterday.

Project Workhorse

The tower crane that moves materials to any point on the Century Place construction project has been termed the "workhorse" of the site. But for Michele Melarango, his operator's perch nearly 100 feet straight up, is home for 10 hours a day.

Rebate No Reason to Buy New Car Most Agree

In response to the federal budget announced June 23, the Ontario Treasurer Darcy McKeough this week introduced a budget shuffle of $128-million in provincial government spending. About $46-million of the $128-million is to bolster the housing and automobile industries.

For the automobile industries, the government is offering a rebate of the five-per cent provincial sales tax on new North American-built cars and station wagons. New car buyers will average a savings of $175 on 1975 models in inventory and new 1976 models. Excluded from eligible rebates, are large luxury cars; models with engine displacements of 460 cubic inches or more; vans; ambulances; hearses; trucks; buses; sport and other work vehicles and all-terrain vehicles; used cars and automobiles acquired by lease or rental.

In an informal survey, Quinte residents gave their reports to the question: Will this new measure prompt you to buy a new car this year? Here are some of their replies.

LOIS HARRINGTON

A 20-year-old housewife from Bloomfield, Lois Harrington, said the rebate will not affect herself.

"It would be tremendous if you're going to buy. We just bought a truck last week and the rebate does not apply to trucks," Mrs. Harrington said.

Mrs. Harrington said, "If you have to buy it, you have to pay for it, regardless whether there was a rebate or not.

WAYNE ROWE

Wayne Rowe, a 28-year-old truck driver from New Lowell, said the rebate will not have a great effect.

"It won't help the average guy buying a new car, if they want to help they should lower the tax on gasoline," said Mr. Rowe.

Having just bought a car earlier this year, Mr. Rowe said he would "never buy a big car again. I'd look for a smaller one."

RON PHILLIPS

The first reaction of Ron Phillips, a 20-year-old teacher from Oshawa, was "obviously not.

"The rebate still wouldn't be enough. Five per cent is absolutely nothing," said Mr. Phillips.

Mr. Phillips said, "It is not particularly an incentive to buy a new car."

He said he feels the rebate is a political play.

DAN HAMILTON

Dan Hamilton said the tax rebate will not prompt him to buy a new car.

"A rebate on the large gas consuming cars? The way gas is today? No way," said the 21-year-old university student.

Mr. Hamilton said, "North American cars are notorious for their mileage."

Mr. Hamilton said he feels the rebate "will have a limited effect."

BETSY FOX

Betsy Fox, a 21-year-old housewife from Wooler, said she felt the rebate might help but it won't prompt her to buy.

"We just don't need a new car," said Mrs. Fox.

"If people need a new car, this might entice them to buy."

"Everything these days seems to be a rebate. This rebate is not bad, it might help," Mrs. Fox said.

ELSIE KEILTY

A computer operator from Frankford, Elsie Keilty, 27, said the rebate will not affect her.

"The price of a car is a little per cent is nothing."

"Even though sales may increase, there is no guarantee that the number of jobs will increase," said Mrs. Keilty.

"I don't want to see more unemployment, but if we had a real auto industry and not just a subsidiary of the U.S., it might help," said Mrs. Keilty.

District at a Glance

Water Levels Low

MADOC — This village has issued an urgent notice asking residents to curtail watering of lawns and gardens. Reason for the request is the warm, dry weather.

Housing Survey Set

MADOC — Council here has approved a request in the Ontario housing ministry for a survey on more senior citizens' units in the village. Recently completed accommodation for the elderly is nearly all 'occupied. It is expected that Hastings, Huntingdon, Madoc, Tudor and Cashel township will participate with the village in a new project.

Committee Formed

DESERONTO — A liaison committee from town council has been set up to increase local government contact with the watermain program under the environment ministry. The mains are to be installed starting this month.

Mayor Peter Dickinson, Deputy Reeve Terry Whalen, clerk-treasurer Sam Knapp and a number of the utilities commission.

Calls Still Cost

STIRLING — Long-distance telephone calls between here and the Belleville area are to the council of this village that, because of company budget restrictions it now cannot promise when toll-free calls will be available between here, Belleville and Frankford. The community has been seeking such a service for some time.

Church Marks Birthday

BOULTER — One of the oldest churches in North Hastings County recently observed its centennial. The 100th anniversary celebration centred on Carlow United Church in the community in Carlow township northeast of Bancroft.

Wells Heads Chamber

TRENTON — Downtown businessman Lloyd Wells has taken over as president of the Trenton Chamber of Commerce, filling a vacancy created with the transfer of the Quaker Oats company manager Bob Prentice to Scarborough. Mr. Wells is also president of the Trenton Retail Merchants Association.

Another Battle with Lake

Angela Gets a Boost From Strong Current

NIAGARA - ON - THE - LAKE, Ont. (CP) — A strong current from the Niagara River helped Angela Kondratiff get off to a strong start this morning in her bid to swim the 32 miles across Lake Ontario.

But while the current helped the 15-year-old Toronto high school student average more than two miles an hour in the early going, observers said it also pushed her off course.

By 2:40 EDT this morning, she had swum eight miles, but was 2½ miles off course. She was scheduled to come ashore at Ontario Place at between two and four this afternoon.

She was averaging a mile every 30 minutes and maintained an average of 68 strokes a minute from the start.

Angela's second bid to cross the lake began at 11:05 EST Friday night when she dove off a life raft into the Niagara River. The swim began in a small cove about 200 yards from a United States Coast Guard pier in Youngstown, N.Y., after she was refused permission to set out from the pier.

"I felt more confident this year than last summer because I had another year of practice," she said.

Last Aug. 19 her mother ordered her pulled from the lake about 1½ miles from the Toronto waterfront. She was cold and delirious after 26 hours and 17 minutes of fighting swells, which sometimes reached eight feet.

This time her mother won't be on the scene to make the decision. She decided not to cross the lake with her daughter because she became seasick last year.

Her father was in one of the chase boats surrounding Miss Kondrak in a diamond pattern around the swam.

The boat owners all are members of the Niagara Region Ontario Association of Sole Swims Association president Art Dufresne is Angela's coach.

The association, financed by a $10,000 provincial grant, was exploitation during the winter after Neil MacNeil, a 17-year-old Toronto lifeguard, disappeared last September during an attempt to swim the lake.

MacNeil tried to swim the lake with a 12-foot boat as an escort and disappeared in broad daylight.

This morning, three members of the Canadian Underwater Divers Association were in rubber dingbys accompanying Angela's flotilla. The swimmer and the divers were all wearing phosphorescent green lights to prevent her being lost in the dark.

Wind Helps Sluggers

Red Sox Bats Boom In Defeat of Rangers

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

As if the area's tenth temple moved in the cramped confines of Fenway Park, Boston Red Sox had the wind on their sides Friday night.

The hard-hitting Red Sox took advantage of the favorable breeze to produce 13 hits and an 11-8 win over Texas Rangers in an American League baseball game.

"You can see the way the wind was blowing," said Boston manager Darrell Johnson. "You just put the ball out of the bat on the ball and it goes."

One of those aided by the steady wind was Bernie Carbo, who three-run homer in the sixth put the Red Sox ahead for good 7-5. Another was Carl Yastrzemski, who got two hits, including a two-run single in Boston's fourth rally.

In Friday's other American League games, Cleveland Indians beat California Angels 5-3, Baltimore Orioles blanked Oakland 4-0, Chicago White Sox turned back Milwaukee Brewers 6-3, Kansas City Royals tripped Detroit Tigers 5-2 and Minnesota Twins routed New York Yankees 11-1 in the first game of a doubleheader before losing the second 4-3.

"You can't get enough runs in a game in this ballpark," said Yastrzemski. "Particularly not when the wind has been blowing out lately.

"But everyone seems to be getting hot as now. That's how we're winning."

The victory was the fifth in a row for the Red Sox, leaders in the American League East.

Carbo hit his first homer of the season into the screen in left-center off San Thomas, who after singles by Bob Heise and Tim Blackwell with one out in the sixth. Then Boston put the game away with its four runs in the eighth inning, two apiece on singles by Doug Griffin and Yastrzemski.

The wind was kind to the Rangers as well as the Red Sox. They walloped 10 hits, including home runs by Jeff Burroughs, Mike Cubbage and Toby Harrah.

Rick Manning's inside-the-park home run with a man on base capped a three-run rally in the seventh inning for the Cleveland over California.

With two out, Manning hit a line drive to left. Both left-fielder Dave Collins and centerfielder Mickey Rivers went after the ball and slammed together. Collins fell to the grass.

Rivers momentarily stopped to aid his prone team-mate and by the time he realized the ball was still in play, Manning had completed his trip around the bases.

Mike Torrez pitched a four-hitter, leading Baltimore over Oakland. Torrez, who had a season high of nine strikeouts while outdueling Oakland left-hander Vida Blue, 3-0.

Jerry Hairston's double with two out in the sixth inning scored two runs and moved Chicago ahead for good.

Buck Martinez' sacrifice fly scored the winning fourth-inning rally that lifted Kansas City past Detroit and broke the Tigers' nine-game winning streak.

Tony Oliva and Jackie Brigps hit home runs to back Bert Blyleven's six-hitter as Minnesota beat New York in its opener. Roy White's tie-breaking single in the fifth inning gave New York its triumph in the second game.

Barrie Team Is Out

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia comes from behind to take a 4-3 victory over defending champion Alberta Jimmies Friday in the Canadian senior amateur baseball tournament.

The B.C. squad recorded 16 victories over Nova Scotia and Newfoundland in previous games.

In other games, Chatham Ironmen from New Brunswick whipped Brandon Manitoba Manitoba 4-1 and the Manitoba team eliminated Yarmouth Nova Scotia 6-4 and Alberta came back to oust Baie Verte Nova Scotia 6-4.

Barrie Flyers relied on the Ontario representatives, 6-5, in the first of three games scheduled for today. B.C. meets Chatham in a bank of six defeated teams in the double knockout tournament and Alberta tangles with Manitoba in a game to eliminate the loser.

Yarmouth is the profile according earlier in the week, B.C. was held to five hits and two runs for six innings when a pitch-hitter got something going against national team member Fred Cardwell, the Alberta starter.

Alberta had a 3-0 lead, the key blow a homer in the fourth by catcher Orv Franchuk.

New Brunswick relied on the eight-hit pitching of Val McClure for its second straight victory.

Third-baseman Ken Martin gave McClure all the runs he needed in the third when he tagged lover Dave Rollman of Dauphin, Man., for a two run homer.

Tim Young's two-run single in the bottom of the eighth was the key to Alberta's victory over Chatham. The Alberta team scored three runs in that inning by bunching five singles.

Prior to that, Barrie pitcher Mel Hoshowsky was comfortably along on a 5-2 lead after driving in four runs himself with a third-inning double and a home run shot in the sixth that cleared the fence in right centre, 370 feet from the plate.

Both starting pitchers had control problems in Manitoba's victory over Vancouver.

Brandon starter Garth Neville went the distance after walking eight, hitting two and striking out 11 baters. Nick Mosher of Vancouver got off to a poor start, giving up two runs in the first inning on three walks and hitting a batter.

Mosher was tagged for two more runs in the third inning when Jim Farman drove them home with a double.

The losers made it close in the ninth with three runs on two walks, two singles and an error before reliever Dennis Anderson struck out Paul Watson on a 2-2 pitch with the bases loaded.

Forbes' Trial

Eyewitnesses Describe Attack

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — "It's from an unwritten rule of hockey that a stick is a cheap-shot instrument," an amateur hockey player testified Friday in the assault trial of Boston Bruins Stan Jonathan.

"You don't have very good leverage on sticks so you can't do much damage to a guy fighting with your hands," added Mark Zelenovich, 23, of Minneapolis.

He said he began playing youth hockey when he was in high school, played on his high school team and currently plays in Minneapolis recreational leagues.

Forbes is charged with aggravated assault for allegedly jabbing Henry Boucha of Minnesota North Stars in the eye with a hockey stick Jan. 4 in a National Hockey League game at Bloomington, Minn.

Witnesses Friday said they saw Forbes charge Boucha as the two players left the penalty box, strike the Minnesota player with his stick and continue attacking him with his fists.

Robert Utecht, the public address announcer for the North Stars, said he saw the incident from a distance of about 10 feet.

"Forbes jabbed his stick at Boucha's eye as though it was a bayonet," said Utecht. He said Forbes then "hammered" at Boucha's face with his fists until several Minnesota players pulled him off.

Utecht and two other witnesses said Forbes was congratulated when he returned to the Boston bench after the incident.

Jim Craw of Boston's Don Cherry's put his arm around Forbes and pat him on the back," said Utecht.

Zelenovich said he saw a Boston player, Ken Hodge, shake Forbes' hand when he returned to the bench.

All-star game at Milwaukee

During the game, he hit two singles, a double and a decisive home run to lead the Phillies to a 2-1 win over the Astros.

Friday's performance gave Luzinski 34 homers and 76 runs batted in, both tops in the major leagues, and a .300 batting average. He was overwhelmed by fans in the voting to select a starting lineup.

After the game, Luzinski argued that "A lot of people have been hurt by the all-star voting." then said with a shrug:

"There's not much you can do about the voting system."

"Don't get me wrong," he added. "Not other people have been hurt by the voting, too. Richie Zisk of Pittsburgh had a good year last year and didn't get in. That wasn't right."

In Friday's other National League games, Pittsburgh Pirates sweet San Diego Padres 6-2 and 5-0, Cincinnati Reds sweet New York Mets 4-3 and 4-1, Chicago Cubs beat San Francisco Giants 8-6, Los Angeles Dodgers edge St. Louis Cardinals 6-5 and Atlanta Braves beat Montreal Expos 3-1 in 10 innings.

Luzinski hit his homer deep into the left field seats, giving the Phillies a 2-0 lead and enabling Larry Christenson to beat the Astros with a five-hitter.

Pittsburgh's John Candelaria gave the Padres only one hitter with a four-hitter for his fourth successive victory and his second shutout in the nightcap to give the Pirates their sweep of San Diego and permit them to widen their East Division lead to 6½ games over the Phillies.

He got all the backing he needed from Willie Stargell, who drove in three runs with a single and two sacrifices. Ed Kirpatrick, who hit a two-run homer, Dave Parker, who doubled and tripled and scored two runs in the opening-game victory.

Pete Rose's single wrapped up a three-run sixth inning that gave the Reds their first-game triumph, then Johnny Bench's three-run homer in the first inning started Cincinnati on its way to the sweep of the Mets.

With the two victories, the Reds opened a 10½-game margin over the Dodgers in the West shortstop Chris Speier, who drove in three runs, two on a seventh-inning homer to help the Giants take a 6-3 lead, threw wildly past first base in the eighth inning to let Pete La Cock score the winning run for Chicago.

Bill Buckner's two-run single in the seventh inning, his third hit of the game, moved the Dodgers past St. Louis.

All-star Pitchers Will Rest

NEW YORK (AP) — American League baseball teams agreed Friday to hold out their all-star game pitchers from Sunday's action in order to give manager Alvin Dark a fresh supply of arms for Tuesday night's season-ender clash with the National League in Milwaukee County Stadium.

In addition to the eight pitchers chosen for the all-star team, each of the six clubs not supplying all-star barters have been asked to hold back one pitcher on Sunday to maintain competitive balance.

For example, Detroit had no pitchers chosen for the AL team. But the Tigers will have one hurler, perhaps Mickey Lolich or one Coleman, held back from Sunday's game against Kansas City because the Royals' Steve Busby was tabbed for the AL team and will not pitch that day.

AL president Lee MacPhail made the same request of his teams last year when he pledged an all-out effort to win the all-star game. The Americans lost that one 5-2, for their 11th all-star loss in the last 12 seasons.

Errors Spell Expos' Defeat

ATLANTA (AP) — "Our relief pitching is about all we have got going for us lately," said Atlanta Braves manager Clyde King after his club snapped a four-game National League baseball losing string Friday night with a 3-1, 10-inning triumph over Montreal.

King failed to mention, however, the six Atlanta errors — four in the final two innings — which paved a premature exit in the Expos downfall.

The Braves tied the game in the 10th when Marty Perez walked with one out off reliever Dale Murray, 3-3, and moved to third on a single by Darrel Evans and an error by Montreal shortstop Gary Carter.

Earl Williams then bloooped a single over first for the winning run.

"He jammed me with a pitch in his last at-bat and inside and I was just lucky to hit it," said Williams.

Aided by the Expos abouts error in the ninth inning, the Braves tied it at 1-1 on Dusty Baker reached second on a double over centerfielder Ellis and scored on Larvell Blanks' single to left.

Knuckleballer Phil Niekro scattered three Expos hits in seven innings and allowed their only run when Larry Parrish broke up the scoreless duel with a run-scoring single after starter had doubled in the seventh.

Relievers Elias Sosa, Max Leon and Tom House held Montreal to three harmless singles.

From Calgary To Hamilton

HAMILTON (CP) — Linebacker Octavius Morgan, part of last year's championship program at Calgary, will be on the other side of the line in the Grey Cup game when the Stampede's play Hamilton Tiger-Cats tonight in a Canadian Football League exhibition game.

Hamilton acquired the 22-year-old University of Illinois graduate in a complete trade deal that sent Canadian quarterback-punter Gerald Kunyk to Calgary earlier in the week.

Morgan will play the strong two runs in the opening-game shortstop Chris Speier, who drove in three runs, two on a seventh-inning homer to help the Giants take a 6-3 lead, threw wildly past first base in the eighth inning to let Pete La Cock score the winning run for Chicago.

Bill Buckner's two-run single in the seventh inning, his third hit of the game, moved the Dodgers past St. Louis.

the rest of the way, with House, Joe Hamilton and Tom Jones.

House came on in the 10th with a runner on second and two out, walked pinch hitter Nate Colbert intentionally and had Jose Morales to fly out in his first pitch.

"It's not what House did, it's what the Braves did," said Montreal manager Gene Mauch, making no mention of the six errors his club committed.

Dan Warthen, the hard-throwing left-hander who was the victim of his club's leaky defence, allowed only three hits, walked four and struck out nine before he was removed for a pinch-hitter in the 10th.

Collir, who was facing stiff opposition at his position from newcomer Vernon Robertson, is out for the season while Jones, a Canadian, will be out three to four weeks.

Ready and Rarin' to Go Back at Same Old Stand

Kind of dove back at you yesterday with no warning after a long pause between columns. Didn't mean to shock anyone or catch people unaware. But did the shop have to lose my head?

I mean, the standing head at the top of this piece. Word mix have got out I'd sworn off columns, or something. Because when it came time to make up Friday's page, there it was . . . gone!

Didn't create much of a stir, really, the shop got the job done with the help of the girls in the photography department. And there it was . . . back!

Why the delay between columns for the past little while?

No, it wasn't the annual holiday.

To me, it was more important. And probably did more good than those two weeks off will do when they come up later on.

We all have our problems. So I won't bore you with mine.

Just wanted to point out that I've had a reticent course on the realization that for every dud one runs across in this business and all the others, there are 10 great people who make him pale by comparison.

And if one were to confirm 10 such duds, just a single helping of encouragement from those other individuals mentioned, would suffice.

At any rate, personal commitments made keeping up the column on a regular basis impossible. Thanks to those in charge here, I wasn't pressed on the subject. Except for a gentle reminder, they were most encouraging and understanding.

Today's effort makes it two straight and I'm on the comeback trail. I look forward hopefully to daily appearances here, except of course when Mike Bradshaw takes up the pen.

Readers will be glad to learn Mike should be back on the job late this week. He's recovering rapidly from surgery and things should be back to normal around here.

SLICES — Hope you enjoy the odd potter thrown in here on the National Baseball League. American League fans may find it a trifle much at times but the fact is, the A. L. doesn't supply press releases.

The N.L. does, and I find much of the information supplied makes for good reading. That's why I pass it on to you.

As a for instance:

It has been 29 years since the shortstop and second baseman from one team both hit over .300 but 1975 may be the year that the feat of former Boston Braves Eddie Stanky (.320) and Alvin Dark (.322) is finally equalled.

Philadelphia's Larry Bowa and Dave Cash have the best shot at the record established in 1946. They're both over the .300 mark before the All-Star Game break.

Pitcher and Player of the Month National League selections for June have been announced.

Pitcher of the month in New York Mets' Tom Seaver who had a 4-0 record during June. His earned run average was 0.76 and he allowed only six hits in 51-two-third innings pitched.

Player of the month in Cincinnati Reds' Joe Morgan this second much selection this year (the other was noted out Philadelphia's Greg Luzinski.

Montreal Expos have a six-day tryout camp scheduled for Toronto's Talbot Park, Saturday and Sunday, July 19-20.

Word is, Expos are cutting back on these camps and Belleville may be by-passed this year.

The camp at Toronto will open at 10 a.m. and run until mid afternoon each day.

Players born in the 1959-60 age bracket are invited to attend.

Co-ordinator of Canadian operations Bob McKenzie will direct proceedings.

"They're off and pacing" called race announcer Gary Stewart as each race began, and one of the best in the racing year, the Maurice Rollins Invitational, was worth watching. Friday at Quinte Exhibition Raceway.

The winner, Perry, took the track in 2:08.1 with second place finisher Rob Ron Roddie putting on a good sprint at the end to almost catch up.

Gerald Robinson drove the four-year-old gelding to the $500 purse and Maurice Rollins cooler (blanket).

The favorite, Rob Ron Roddie, driven by Brian Bellamy, came in second, while Charity Chick finished third, with Pat Hunt at the reins.

The eighth race was one of the most exciting of the evening, as three horses went neck and neck.

The wire went to Darn Frosty in 2:16, with Darn Finlay driving. The exacta paid $89 for the combination of the winner and Frosty's place finisher, was driven by Ross Brown.

The fourth race saw Lucky Homedale win in its best time ever, at 2:10.04. Harry Bailitt drove the horse to victory with Cobopport County, driven by Walter Demelle, finishing second.

The Jean Mowerts Memorial Pace was taken by Sod Knight, in 2:12.4, with Ross Ray at the reins.

A Hamilton's Texaco cooler (blanket) was presented with the $300 purse.

Second place went to Hilldon Binnie, driven by Brian Bellamy.

The big payoff of the evening came in the 10th when Lady Gem took the win in 2:15.4, with Kelly's Own coming in second. The exacta of $3 paid off $104.

Tops in the drivers' standings is Ross Ray, Gillish, who brought his total up to 16 wins on Friday night while Phil Hunt is in second with 13 wins and Brian Bellamy has 11 racing victories.

RACE 1: Emancipator, Gov Lib-Pretty Pam, 2:16, 3-yo, Pacing, Harry, R. McQuaid 2.40, 2.20; Doc Blow, for Trenton Pitcher Dennis Baril who came on in relief of starter Brian Hanson with one cut in the second. Baril pitched solid ball in his eight inning-plus stint.

Marty Kemp, Peter Walsh and Joe Lastie shared the winners' pitching.

Peterborough held a 12-11 edge in the hitting department.

Tops at the plate for the winners was Hill who went five for six. Simmons and Gord Lewis each had a pair of singles.

Hanson cracked a base loaded triple to spark the Trenton attack. He also had a single. Danny Hamilton and Chris Walsh each singled twice.

HAS SEVENTH LOSS

QUEBEC (CP) — Metros starter Larry Gura of Stratford, Ont., suffered his seventh loss in 14 decisions as Bristol Red Sox downed Quebec 4-2 in an Eastern League baseb all game Friday night.

State Farm Nipped

PETERBOROUGH — Todd Hill's single in the bottom of the 10th inning scored Carol Simmons with the winning run as the home team shaded Trenton State Farm 8-7 in Eastern Ontario Baseball Association bantam action here Friday night.

Hill's timely hit followed a Simmons single. Simmons stole second and scampered all the way home on the Hill safety.

It was a particularly tough blow, for Trenton pitcher Dennis Baril who came on in relief of starter Brian Hanson with one out in the second. Baril pitched solid ball in his eight inning-plus stint.

Marty Kemp, Peter Walsh and Joe Lastie shared the winners' pitching.

Peterborough held a 12-11 edge in the hitting department.

Brooke Bond, UIC Win

A pair of close scores in the Belleville Industrial Softball League kept things exciting at the Alemite Park, for the leagues' doubleheader Friday night.

Brooke Bond defeated Post Office 3-1 and UIC took the Intelligencer by the same score.

Tom St. Jules took the victory for Brooke Bond, giving up six hits and one walk while sending six batters to the bench on third strikes.

Norm Lockhart was saddled with the loss, although he gave up just one earned run. The other two came in on Post Office errors. Lockhart struck out 10 batters while giving up eight hits and three walks.

Not only did the pitchers put on a good show on the mound, but they both led their teams at bat.

St. Jules had a single and a double, while Dave Middleton doubled for the winners.

Lockhart cracked a single and a triple for the losers while other teams safeties were all singles.

UIC put a better lock on first place by defeating The Intelligencer.

The win went to Rick Sullivan on a three-hitter.

The loss was charged to Ron Colledge, who gave up only five hits.

Tops at the plate for UIC was Bob Robb with two safeties, while Joe Clark, Al Walker and Rick Sullivan also supplied hits.

For the Intelligencer the hits went to Maurice Switzer, Tony Cancilla and Colledge.

Bantams Romp Past Stirling

The Belleville Downtown Merchants pushed 29 runs across the plate against Stirling to help send them to an East Central Ontario Bantam League game Friday night.

The Sons pitched the win, giving up just one Stirling hit. They had 12 strikeouts and walked two. He got relief help from Rick Tripp, who struck out one.

The loss went to Bruce Myers and Rod McKeown, who had seven strikeouts between them.

Tripp led the team at the plate, as he hit a grand slam homer and a single to help the Belleville cause. Doug Cassidy doubled and singled while Clarence Broekema also smacked a line shot which went for a home run

ANDY CAPP

Ontario Amateur Championship

Cowan's Title Never in Doubt

KITCHENER, Ont. (CP) — Gary Cowan's fifth Ontario amateur championship at the Westmount Golf and Country Club Friday was never in doubt.

The 30-year-old Kitchener resident shot an even par 78 to win the tournament and a spot on the Willingdon Cup team with a 285 total.

Cowan who took a four shot lead into the final round, faced a late charge by Mike Mealia of Toronto but took it in stride to finish one stroke ahead of Mealia's 286 total.

He was tied for third place after the first round Tuesday but he never let it bother him. He kept his poise most of the tournament and only Friday did he face any real problems.

Cowan had three birdies and three bogeys and spent most of the day in the trees that line the 6,681-yard Westmount course.

Mealia, who shot an even par 36 on the front nine, birdied four of the first five holes on the back nine.

As Cowan teed off on the 444-yard 10th hole Mealia, one shot behind Cowan, teed off on the 155-yard par-3 17th hole.

Cowan reached the 16th in regulation but three-putted from 30-feet for a bogey. But, Mealia's tee shot on 17 landed in a back bunker and he shot a bogey four on the hole.

Cowan and Mealia finished with pars to give Cowan, a two-time United States amateur champion, the Ontario title.

"My putting was bad and it affected my game," Cowan said after the tournament. "I kept thinking here we go again.

"I was exasperated with myself. I fought so hard all week I just didn't want to throw it away on the last day.

"After three-putting the 16th if no one was around there would have been a tree wearing a golf club."

The top four finishers won a spot on the Willingdon team to represent Ontario in inter-provincial competition at the Canadian amateur championship in Saint John, N.B., August 16 to 18.

Cowan, Mealia and Rod Spittle of Fort Erie, who shot a 289 total and third place, and fourth place holder Greg Patterson of Mount Hope who finished with a 291 for a 291 total comprise the team.

Mealia, although he was four shots behind Cowan going into the final round, felt he had a chance to win the tournament.

"I felt if I was even par after nine I would make the team (Willingdon) and could take a run at Gary," he said.

"But that bogie on 17 really hurt. I would have rather lost by two shots instead of one."

The final round was played under ideal conditions, bright sun and a light breeze. The players face none of the problems—rain, high winds and third round Thursday.

Bruce Brewer bogied the 18th hole and lost his spot on the Willingdon team to Patterson. Brewer's one-under-par 71 gave him a 291 total and fifth place.

Veteran Nick Weslock of Burlington, who has won the championship eight times, shot four-over-par 76 for a 300 total for ninth place.

British Open Is Up for Grabs

CARNOUSTIE, Scotland (AP) — The 104th British Open has turned into a cling fight and Johnny Miller, for one, has no idea who'll wind up on top after today's fourth and final round.

But Miller does have two predictions to offer—the course record will probably be broken for the fourth time and the result will probably be decided on the final four holes.

Miller turned in a 66 to equal the record for the 7,065-yard, par-72 Carnoustie links in the third round Friday and jumped over Jack Nicklaus as a firm 11-to-4 favorite in the betting.

Miller finished in third place after the third round, two strokes behind Bobby Cole of South Africa, who birdied the dreaded 18th hole to take a 13-under-par 204. Jack Newton, an unknown Australian, came in one stroke behind Cole.

There came a group from the United States—Miller at 206, Tom Watson one stroke behind him, Jack Nicklaus, Hale Irwin, John Mahaffey and Alan Tapie, 207 at 208. Also at 208 are Ireland's Christy O'Connor, the South African youngster playing his first open, and Neil Coles from Britain.

Which means the final round today begins with four strokes separating the top 10 players, and, as Miller said, "no name the right guy would be crazy."

"The final result could depend on the last four holes," Miller said. "On these, you've got to have a lot of guts and enough experience to pull out the good shots."

Most dangerous of the lot is the 18th, a brute of a par four with a stream called the burn looping round from the start of the fairway to finish just in front of some sand traps ahead of the green.

The 18th was the graveyard for many hopes in the first three rounds—last year's champion Gary Player landed in the burn every time he played the hole and finished up well out of contention with 215.

Both first-and second-round leaders—Peter Oosterhuis of Britain and David Huish, virtually an unknown from Scotland—faded in the third round Friday. Oosterhuis finished the first at 212, seven ahead of par on 209, but still 11th in the final field.

Huish, a club pro who raised hometown hopes with a 69-67—136 after two rounds, faded with a 76 Friday to drop well down the list at 312.

Dan Halldorson Leader in CPGA

TORONTO (CP) — Dan Halldorson came here just to see how he would stand up to four rounds of competitive golf after suffering through more than two months with a virus infection.

Today, the 23-year-old from Brandon, Man., carries the lead into the third round of the $35,000 Canadian Professional Golfers Association championship at the Bayview Golf and Country Club.

"This was just going to be a trial run to see how I could play and how well I would last through a tournament," Halldorson said after shooting 70 to take a one-stroke lead with a five-under-par total of 137 on the 6,445-yard Bayview layout.

Halldorson, who spent the last month resting at home, said doctors told him before he came here that he was only 50 per cent recovered from the virus which they still have not identified.

"I'm still underweight and weak. I'd like to practice more but I'm still weak."

Should Halldorson falter, there are several players lurking within close range, including three former champions.

Moe Norman, the defending title holder from Gilford, Ont., and three-time former champ George Knudson of Toronto are both three strokes behind and Wilf Homenuk of Winnipeg, a two-time former winner, is four strokes off the pace.

One stroke behind Halldorson are Gar Hamilton of Toronto and Bill Tape of Woodbridge, Ont., formerly of Kitchener, with Bob Breen of Brampton, Ont., another stroke back.

Hamilton and Breen shot 70s and Tape a 71.

Norman and Bill Wakeham of Duncan, B.C., both shot 69s to reach 140, joining Knudson, who had a 72.

Homenuk shot a one-under-par 70 for his 141 where he was tied with Tim McCutcheon of Kitchener, Jack Kay and Gary Bowerman of Toronto and Dave Garner of Woodbridge, Ont.

First-round leader Bill Wright of Edmonton soared from an opening 66 to a 78 and was well back at 144.

Wright was not the only one to suffer from changed pin and tee positions and a brisk wind that made the course much more difficult than it was for Thursday's opening round when 20 players broke par.

Carol Mann Is Sharp In the Opening Round

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Carol Mann broke one Ladies Professional Golf Association record and tied another en route to a six-under-par 66 Friday for the first-round lead in a $63,000 tournament.

Shoving aside the pressures of the LPGA presidency, the six-foot-three blonde fired seven birdies in a row for a back-nine total of 29, seven under par on the Riviera Country Club course.

Gerda Boykin, one of two pros tied for third place at 68, had the previous LPGA record with six successive birdies in 1963 at Caldwell, Colo.

Miss Mann's nine-hole performance matched the best mark of 29 Marlene Hagge set four years ago in the Columbus tournament.

Pam Higgins, alone in second at 67, was not surprised she was one shot behind.

"Carol plays well with things on her mind," said the runner-up, who had four birdies in a row.

Sandra Haynie also had a 68 with front and back nines of 34. Tied for fifth place with 69s were Judy Rankin, Jane Blalock, Penny Pulz, Diane Patterson and Marg Masters.

Sandra Post, formerly o Oakville, Ont., is five strokes off the pace with a 36-35—71.

Jocelyne Bourassa of Shawinigan, Que., had nines of 35 and 37 for a 72 total.

GREAT NEWS FROM GENERAL MOTORS FOR SMALL CAR BUYERS

60,000-MILE ENGINE GUARANTEE

Until now, in the 1975 model year, the toughest engine guarantee you could get on imported or North American cars covered either three years or 36,000 miles, or one year with unlimited mileage. Well, General Motors has just gone all the rest of them one tougher, with a 60,000 mile or five year engine guarantee (whichever comes first), on new 1975 Chevrolet Vegas, and Chevrolet Monzas equipped with a 140 cubic inch 4-cylinder engine delivered on or after June 25, 1975.

General Motors guarantees to the owners of 1975 vehicles equipped with a 140 cubic inch 4-cylinder engine that any authorized General Motors dealer will make repairs, without charge to the owner, during the term of the guarantee, to the cylinder block, cylinder head, all internal engine parts, the intake and exhaust manifolds and water-pump made necessary because of defects in material or workmanship...

This guarantee is in addition to the New Vehicle Warranty but does not apply to repairs required because of misuse, negligence, accident or lack of reasonable or proper maintenance.

This guarantee is available to earlier purchasers of 1975 Chevrolet Vegas and 4-cylinder Chevrolet Monzas at extra cost through any General Motors dealer before October 1, 1975.

A 60,000 mile engine guarantee! Don't make any deals until you see Trudeau's.

MONZA

Now one of the most popular new cars of 1975 is an even better buy. The spirited sport, stand-out style, value, economy . . . and a new 5-year or 60,000 mile guarantee. It's all 1975 Chevrolet models. No other car manufacturer makes this offer. Test drive Monza today . . .

IN MEMORIAM

BOLDRICK — In loving memory of a dear mother, Mrs. Ethel Mae Boldrick who was called to rest July 11, 1973.
Dearest mother you have left us,
Your loss was deeply felt,
But God saw fit to take her home,
Its can all our sorrows heal.
Taken from a world of sorrows,
Taken from a world of care,
Taken from your husband and daughters,
Ah! your voice we do not hear,
But our mother often told us,
Not to weep when she was gone,
But to live so that we'd meet her,
Where the flowers never fade,
Farewell mother, dearest mother,
Since on earth we meet no more,
We will all do our best to prove
Just beyond the golden shore.
—Ever loving, husband, Helen, Mary and Robert.

HAYES — In loving memory of a dear mother, Marianne who passed away July 13, 1974.
Our lips cannot tell how we miss her,
Our hearts cannot tell what to say,
Our eyes know how we miss her,
In a home that is lonesome today.
—Ever loved by son Garry, Wayne, Brian, Calvin, Sheila, daughters, Barry, Beverly, Brenda.

HAYES — In loving remembrance of a dear mother Marion who passed away July 13, 1974.
The dearest mother, the kindest friend,
One of the best whom God could lend,
Loving, thoughtful, gentle and true,
Always thinking of others, too.
—Always remembered by wife Gladys.

HAYES — In loving memory of a dear brother Robert Fox who passed away July 13, 1974.
Gone is the face we loved so dear,
Gone is the voice we used to hear,
Silent is the step we used to meet,
But not too far for thought to reach,
Sweet to remember him who once was here,
And now though absent is just as dear.
—Sadly missed by sister Brenda and family.

FOX — In loving memory of a dear brother, Robert Fox who passed away July 13, 1974.
Sadly missed but never forgotten,
Sadly missed but never forgotten and sadly missed by sister Doris, Jerry and family.

For a lovely home, lulled by whispering Bay breezes and mature sheltering trees dappling sunlight through their leaves. Flanked by Old Orchard Road and County Road 3, this is an uncluttered, secluded 5-acre haven marvellously adapted to personal pursuits and informal relaxation. A beautiful soaring hillside design created by nature with a dramatic sweeping view of the Bay of Quinte, CFB and Trenton. $39,500.00.

SHAPES OF THE PAST
Linger in the generous dimensions of this Victorian era country brick home situated on the Wellington-Greenville Road. Nine rooms that include clan-sized dining room, grandma's kitchen, rain-chaser verandah ideal for rocking chairs. Park-like grounds with mixed fruit orchard, 100 x 200. Requires modernization.

A BIG PLUS FOR BEGINNERS OR NEWLY RETIRED
200 x 220 lot with a small frame bungalow. Kitchen and living room combined, 1 bedroom, 2 piece bath. Oil space heating, hot water tank owned. Single car garage, chicken house. About 12 miles to Trenton and Belleville. $11,500.00.

THE PLEASURES OF LIFE
Include bright blue skies, golden summer days and that old black magic called loam! 43 flourishing acres, 38 workable, 5 bush, half mile road frontage, year-round spring-fed pond. Asking $24,500.00 and vendor will hold mortgage.

Your Horoscope

By BERNICE BEDE OSOL

For Sunday, July 13

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Your wonderlust is missing today. You'll be happier at home, working on a hobby or puttering around the yard.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You communicate well with people today. Your special forte is creating unique activities for social events that will be fun for all.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You'll have doubts about making a major expenditure for the home. You shouldn't. The purchase will save you both labor and money.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Work done for a relative who needs help will earn you thanks and a warm sense of personal pride when the job's done.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Where yesterday you were overly liberal with your means, today you're supercautious. You'll have a good but inexpensive time visiting a shut-in.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) A day when you'll finally be able to relax and put all thoughts of work out of mind. You'll enjoy socializing with friends.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You'll accept the praises heaped on you today with dignity, but you'll be bursting with pride inwardly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You've keen in competitive sports today. A high degree of luck will add to your skill to help you win the cup.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) The recognition you've been seeking will come to you today, provided you've done the job to the best of your ability.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You won't consider it an intrusion if a friend drops in and asks you to share in an activity. You'll find harmony in tandem.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Creative methods you'll discover in pursuing a hobby will revitalize your thinking and provide continued interest.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) You're a lover, not a fighter today, so don't resist the urge to be romantic with your mate or special friend.

By BERNICE BEDE OSOL

For Monday, July 14

Organization is your strong suit today. Get together with friends or associates. Plan activities for the week ahead.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You can combine your creative talents with practical considerations to accomplish a great deal. Your judgment is excellent.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) A fun day with the pups or gals, when you'll get out of the house for a spontaneous spree or a friendly lunch break.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You'll appreciate your home today and enjoy expressing yourself doing something around the yard, kitchen or workshop.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Fulfillment of a secret desire is in store for you, away from home or job. Could be tennis or golf, or even a rendezvous.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You'll invest some money in home entertainment today. This may seem frivolous, but it will provide fun for family and friends.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Outside activity is the key to a good time today. You'll enjoy most being with friends, pursuing lighthearted pleasure.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You'll achieve a secret ambition that will bring you great personal satisfaction, recognition and financial gain.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Enjoying yourself with people can be profitable today. You could get a hot tip on the golf course or at poolside.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) A satisfying day. You'll be able to work out an agreement that's been hanging fire in a way to please both parties.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 19) You have a flair for originating large group activities today, probably because you're in a cycle where you have a strong desire to serve others.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Getting the job done will put interfere with your having a good time. You handle others, not courses or property well today.

Raises Money

LONDON (CP) — After scrimping for years, Robert Crabtree and his wife raised the money to send him to help out of the army. But the army refused on the grounds that Bandsman Crabtree was the only solo trombone player in his regimental band and was essential. A member of Parliament interceded, but the army insists he must stay in uniform until a replacement can be found.

Ask the Jacobys

Today's question comes from New York and asks us how we stand on the subject of four- and five-card major openings.

The answer is that we try to avoid opening four-card majors, but do open them when we feel can't find another bid. Thus, we open one spade with:

♠ A K Q 9 ♥ K 4 ♦ Q 7 2 ♣ J 4.

or one heart with:

♠ 6 5 2 ♥ K Q J 9 ♦ A Q 7 6 ♣ Q 3.

Plant Under Study

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau indicated more firmly Thursday that federal participation toward a proposed enriched uranium plant in Quebec, using James Bay power, has softened if not changed.

Addressing questions in the Commons, the prime minister said a prefeasibility study of the project indicates the case for the plant is not clear cut as opponents have made out, Mr. Trudeau said. Premier Bourassa had took a similar softer line last week.

Freezes Construction

TORONTO (CP) — A freeze has been placed on construction of new schools or additions to schools proposed by the Toronto Minister Thomas Wells told the legislature Thursday.

He said Toronto public and separate school boards are being urged to share existing space.

Shulman Polls Candidate

TORONTO (CP) — Members of the legislature and nominated candidates for the next election are being polled by Dr. Morton Shulman, New Democratic Party member for Toronto High Park, to see whether they want a pay raise.

Dr. Shulman said he wants to give everybody a chance to put themselves on the record because "bumping salaries the day after the election is immoral."

He said his questionnaire asks whether candidates and members are prepared to serve on their present salary and tax-free allowance of $22,500 a year and whether they would oppose or support any move to raise it.

Dr. Shulman, who has said he will not run again, has 30 replies so far and plans to make the results of the poll public.

Hydro to Comply

TORONTO (CP) — Ontario Hydro will comply with a provincial government request made in the mini-budget to cut costs, Pierre Genest, Hydro lawyer, said Friday.

Mr. Genest told the Ontario Energy Board, reviewing a Hydro rate increase, that the utility will make substantial reductions in expenditures for 1976 to conform with government policy.

Travel Industry Confused

TORONTO (CP) — Ontario's travel industry will be in a state of confusion Tuesday when new provincial legislation requiring registration and bonding of all agencies and wholesalers comes into effect, Douglas Caven, registrar under the new act, said Friday.

Only five of the 1,300 provincial operators have been approved to date and only 50 have submitted applications for registration, he said.

While the remainder will be technically operating outside the new law, "we're not going to start prosecuting on the 15th, that's for sure," he said in an interview.

The registrar said he understands that rather than any deliberate attempt by the industry to ignore the legislation they opposed when it was first introduced Dec. 5, 1974, agents have run into difficulty in receiving quick approval from bonding firms.

Applications for registration, to be returned with confirmation of the required $5,000 bond, were mailed out June 9.

But Mr. Caven said agents who have not returned applications to submit them with a covering letter which indicates their intention to comply with the bonding requirements.

Up the Pole

KETTERING, England (CP) — A shock awaited Mr. and Mrs. Geoffrey Ager when they returned from a week's holiday. They found that a 30-foot telegraph pole had been put in front of their house, just five feet away from the window. The pole, blocking their view, was placed there by the post office, who say that although there are no immediate plans to connect telephone wires to the pole, it must stay there.

Fencing for Wembley

LONDON (CP) — To stop the crowd scenes which followed the Cup Final and the England-Scotland international football season recently, the Football Association has decided to erect fencing at Wembley Stadium. Ted Croker, secretary said: "The aim is to get Wembley back to its old dignity and I am sure it is what all the people want."

Wife Can't Believe Winner

TORONTO (CP) — Maria Moreira went right on working at her job in a shoe factory Friday, refusing to believe her husband Manuel had won $100,000 in the Wintario draw Thursday.

"They (Wintario officials) will have to tell her, for the wen't believe me," her husband said as he discussed what the money will mean to the family.

"She's going to quit her job," he said. "It pays about $100 a week but she's going to stay home with our children, (Manuel, 8, and Dolores, 7) from now on."

Mr. Moreira, 31, who works as a chicken packer for $125 a week, has no intention of quitting his job but he's sure life will be more pleasant from now on.

For instance, he's going to start house hunting immediately so he and his family can move out of their flat. And he's going to buy a car.

The Moreira family come to Canada from Portugal about two years ago but doesn't intend to spend any of its money to return for a visit.

Miners Strike

SUDBURY, Ont. (CP) — Picket lines were still up today and main operations in International Nickel Co. of Canada (Inco), the world's largest producer of nickel, were halted during the third day of a strike which began at midnight Wednesday night.

White House Fertilizer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The agriculture department and the National Capital Parks had plans to deliver 30 tons of treated sewage to the White House Friday to improve the lawn, but someone said, "No thanks."

Finds Parrot

CAIRO (Reuter)— A missing parrot was reunited with his owner Friday after a relative heard the bird calling the owner's name in a Cairo pet shop.

The parrot, belonging to General Mohamed Fawzi, a former war minister, disappeared two months ago.

The general's son-in-law was passing the pet shop in the centre of Cairo when he heard the bird calling "General Fawzi, General Fawzi."

Carpenters on Strike

TORONTO (CP) — About 4,000 carpenters will go on strike building projects in Toronto Monday to back demands for large wage increases similar to those recently given other trades, the business manager of the Toronto District Council of the Carpenter's Union said Friday.

Prices Down

ST. CATHARINES, Ont. (CP) — Sour cherry prices have dropped $118.40 a ton this year to $302.10, down from $421.50 last year, and Niagara Peninsula growers say they won't make enough to cover cost of production. Keith Matlin, secretary-manager of the Ontario Tender Fruit Marketing Board, said Friday the board has asked for federal government aid. Imports and a larger harvest are blamed for driving the price down.

Requests Crime Study

TORONTO (CP) — Attorney-General John Clement has rejected yet another request by Morton Shulman (NDP-High Park for a royal commission on organized crime.

Dr. Shulman based his latest demand in the legislature Friday on his belief that Jack Hovey, whom he described as a Toronto loan shark, had been "rubbed out" and that the woman with whom Hovey was living was told she is marked for death.

He said Mr. Hovey disappeared four months ago after telling the woman he was going out to buy a newspaper and would be back in five minutes. He said the man was a big operator who was becoming serious competition for two men who control loan sharking in Toronto.

Companies Still Smart Despite Recession End

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite high hopes for an end to the recession, the first big flow of second-quarter corporate earnings the past week forced one more look at some of the financial damage.

General Electric Co., for instance, still smarting from the steep drop in consumer demand for appliances and electricity, showed a profit drop of 12 per cent in the period. International Paper Co.'s earnings fell 37 per cent.

International Business Machines Corp. had a profit drop, New York Corp. had an earnings rise of 31 per cent in the second quarter, and Citicorp's rose 18 per cent.

But two other things rose this past week: Sugar prices and a key commercial bank's prime lending rate.

Amstar Corp. led major sugar refiners in raising wholesale grocery sugar prices about a nickel a pound. The refiners also boosted industrial sugar products used for soft drinks, baked goods and other consumer goods. The makers of these goods and the grocery chains that sell them will decide whether to pass the higher costs on to the consumer.

Meanwhile, First National City Bank increased its prime rate ½-point to 7½ per cent. It was the second straight weekly prime rate rise by the bank, and apparently came in response to moves by the Federal Reserve to slow the growth of the nation's money supply as an anti-inflationary precaution.

The Civil Aeronautics Board in the past week announced plans for an experiment that would de-regulate some airline fares and routes, which might mean forced price competition and lower rates for the air traveller.

Airline spokesmen indicated the experiment, which the CAB won't start until Congress, airlines and the public are heard from, might be an opportunity for the industry to prove once and for all that some routes, and indeed some airlines, need government regulatory protection to survive.

Space Flight Holds Prestige for Countries

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Five years ago it was considered impossible, a dream. But on Tuesday, American astronauts and Soviet cosmonauts are to rocket into orbit to start a joint space flight, appropriately labelled a mission of "high flying detente."

Much symbolism and greeting will be involved on this international flight of the world's leading spacefaring countries, once keen rivals in space exploration until United States astronauts landed on the moon. Neither wants to fall in the global spotlight that will follow every moment.

It won't be just a "handshake in the sky," say the astronauts and cosmonauts, but a mission that hopefully will lead to future co-operative flights in large space stations and perhaps to the planets.

The flight is scheduled to start at 8:20 a.m. EDT Tuesday with the launching of the two cosmonauts in a Soyuz spacecraft from the Baikonur Cosmodrome on the edge of a central Soviet desert.

If there are no problems, three Apollo astronauts will rise in an Apollo spacecraft away from Cape Canaveral 7½ hours later, at 3:50 p.m.

With the more sophisticated Apollo performing all the critical manoeuvres, the astronauts will pursue the Soyuz through the skies for two days, moving in for a hookup at 12:15 p.m. Thursday, 140 miles above West Germany.

Three hours later, both ends of an airlock tunnel connecting the vehicles will be opened and the American commander, air force Brig.-Gen. Thomas Stafford, and the Soviet commander, air force Col. Alexei Leonov, will shake hands.

It will be a moment of high emotion, not only for its symbolism, but because these two men have been past friends during two years of training, he have a movie about Soviet military pilots. Ten years ago he became the first man to "walk" in space.

Israeli Planes Strike Amid Peace Hopes

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Israeli planes attacked a Palestinian refugee camp in Lebanon twice, and four persons were reported killed and 22 wounded. Several hours later dockets from southern Lebanon hit the Israeli town of Nahariya, slightly wounding two women, the Israeli command announced.

In Jerusalem, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin reported to the Israeli cabinet on his meeting with U.S. Secretary Henry Kissinger. A communique said the government would continue "the process of clarification and negotiations with the purpose of reaching a positive conclusion."

The Palestine guerrillas said their missile and gun crews hit two of the Israeli Phantom jets that rocketed and strafed the Ein Helweh refugee camp near Sidon, 30 miles south of Beirut, Sunday.

The Lebanese defence ministry said one of the jets crashed in flames into the Mediterranean. But the Israeli command said: "All our planes returned safely to base."

Residents of the camp said the first attack lasted 20 minutes, and the second attack came 20 minutes later.

The rockets destroyed a guerrilla radio station and damaged a number of huts and a mosque.

The Israelis said a plant manufacturing war material for guerrillas was among the targets, but residents of the camp denied that such a plant existed.

Palestinian sources said those killed were a woman, a farm worker and two guerrillas.

The Israeli command also announced that an Israeli navy ship supplied fuel to a Lebanese freighter Saturday that was drifting 20 miles northwest of the Sinai coast. The Lebanese captain thanked the Israelis for the "superb treatment," the announcement said.

Rabin on his return from his meeting with Kissinger said he was "more optimistic" about chances for an agreement with Egypt. But cabinet spokesman Gershon Avner said Minister Yigal Diniitz, the Israeli ambassador to the U.S., would return to Washington to work with the state department on the further clarifications sought by the cabinet.

Meanwhile, the Cairo newspaper Al Ahram accuses Israel of "procrastinating manoeuvres" and says Egypt would demand resumption of the Geneva conference if this kept up.

Informed sources in Beirut said Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, Syria and Kuwait are cracking down on a small terror group known as the Arab Communist Organization.

Residents Reject Self-help

By COLIN BRUCE
Staff Reporter

Residents of Quinte Heights subdivision have refused to make any improvements to their water system despite claims that they can neither shower nor flush.

Three weeks ago residents filled Sidney Township council chambers demanding action to upgrade the water system that has since been termed "inadequate" by representatives of the province's ministry of the environment. That meeting adjourned until last Thursday when council and residents met with Noramco Corp. — developer of the housing project.

At that meeting, Noramco officials said they would run temporary pipes from other wells on the project site to water system wells so that the system would recharge more quickly and provide more water pressure.

In return, the residents would make provisions to rent a pump that would bring the water down from the remote wells to the system wells.

Lavern Hatcher, spokesman for the group, said during an interview: "We have decided not to improve Noramco's system at our expense."

He said the residents are seeking legal advice.

"We want to find out the details and strength of agreements between Sidney Township and Noramco — particularly that portion of the agreement which states if the work on the subdivision is not satisfactory that township may have the work done and the bills will be sent to Noramco," said Mr. Hatcher.

At present the residents of the 55-home development are on a water austerity program. No water is being used for lawns or outside uses and most families are taking their laundry to commercial laundromats rather than using household water, said Mr. Hatcher.

It was estimated by Noramco that necessary modifications to the system would cost approximately $45,000 — a bill the firm says it is not going to pay.

"Somebody . . . the township, the province or the developer . . . is responsible for this," said Mr. Hatcher. "Something has to be done."

Don't Despair Says PLO Leader

SIDON, Lebanon (AP) — The guerrilla leader 100 miles south of Beirut told the Palestinians at the Ein Helweh refugee camp and Israeli planes attacked it: "Don't panic. Don't succumb to despair, because victory over the Zionist enemy will eventually be yours."

"Remember the saying of Ho Chi Minh that wars entail gains and losses," said Abu Maher, second-in-command of the Marxist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine. "Let the enemy destroy the camps, but let us always remember that liberating Palestine is our ultimate objective."

The Israeli jets killed four persons and wounded 22 in the attacks Sunday on the camp, in which 20,000 Palestinians live.

Dr. Fathi Arafat, whose brother Yasser heads the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), was treating the wounded.

Canadian Babies Sold In U.S.

MONTREAL (CP) — The Gazette says an international network of doctors and lawyers, using abortion referral agencies as sources, is channelling newborn Canadian babies to childless couples in the United States.

At least two Montreal abortion referral agencies attempted recently to arrange private adoptions here for Gazette reporters posing as inward mothers or prospective parents, the newspaper says. Abortion here is licensed as an adoption agency.

The newspaper says several New York abortion centres which take abortion referrals from Montreal also offered over the phone to arrange expensive-paid private adoptions for persons posing as pregnant Montreal women.

Ford Has New Oil Plan To Lift Price Ceilings

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford sent to Congress today what he called a "compromise oil decontrol plan" that would lift present petroleum price ceilings during the next 2½ years.

Ford estimated his blueprint, if accepted by Congress, would add seven cents to the price of a gallon of gasoline by 1977 and reduce demand for imported oil by 300,000 barrels a day in the same period.

The oil that would be decontrolled under the president's proposal would be that coming from domestic wells that went into production before mid-1973. Under present regulations, such oil is subject to a ceiling price of about $5.25 a barrel. By contrast, domestic oil coming from more recent wells is uncontrolled and sells for about $13.

Under the Ford plan, the present controls on so-called old oil gradually would be removed over a 30-month period starting August 1 and ending in January, 1978.

New Killings Weaken Ceasefire With Protestants and Catholics

LONDON (AP) — The fragile, five-month-old ceasefire between Protestants and Roman Catholics in Protestant-dominated Northern Ireland looked ever more feeble today, with three new killings and a toughening stance by diehard Protestant leaders.

Meanwhile, police in England were quoted as saying they had details of a plan by the Provisional wing of the outlawed Irish Republican Army (IRA) to renew planting bombs in British cities such as the most prominent Britons if the truce fails.

Police in the English port city of Liverpool, where many Irish live, arrested IRA gunman Sean Kinsella, who broke jail with 38 other IRA men in the Irish Republic last August. Several of these men could be in Britain, police believe.

Liverpool police said the arms and explosives seized in a raid there last week is the biggest IRA arms cache ever uncovered in Britain. The Dublin Sunday Press newspaper says parity burned documents found in the raid described an IRA plan to bomb London and English Midlands cities if sectarian conflict bursts out again in Northern Ireland.

The Sun says the British police have details of IRA plans to shoot British judges and policemen. It suggests seven shooings of policemen, one of them fatal, in English cities since Christmas have involved the IRA, and claims a buildup for the projected violence in Britain has been going on for months.

Chief Clamps Down On City Vandalism

By ROBIN CHASE
Staff Reporter

Increased police patrols, public appeals and a proposed educational program will be brought into action here to deal with an alarming rise in reports of vandalism in Belleville.

Police Chief Douglas Crosbie.

Chief Crosbie said Saturday there were only three reported cases of vandalism 25 years ago in the city but there were slightly over 300 cases in 1974.

"We're going to increase patrols, call on the public to assist us and use unmarked cars on some of our patrols," he said.

"We're hoping in September to sit down with the education people to see what input we can get from the public school system, Chief Crosbie added.

He explained the current program by which safety officers visit schools might be revamped and become similar to a system in the United States where school resources officers carry on intensive programs throughout the school year.

Vandalism would be one of the subjects taught in significant detail, he said.

Chief Crosbie said his department recently obtained a short film on vandalism aimed at children under 14 years of age and it has a simple message to it. We would be pleased to provide it to any interested group.

He pointed out vandals "are getting younger all the time." He said the age spread is currently between 10-20 years.

Light penalties imposed by the courts on those convicted of vandalism are only part of the problem, Chief Crosbie commented. "If it's a social problem, such as lack of proper upbringing, then the courts are only a part of it," he said.

"The courts are after the fact," he noted. "We want to stop it before it gets started."

Joint Space Shot Ends 18-year Race

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Astronauts, cosmonauts, spaceships and rockets are ready for the joint United States-Soviet space mission that gets under way Tuesday, ending the space race that began two years ago with the launching of Sputnik.

Countdowns ticked away smoothly on two continents today for the two launchings that will propel the U.S. Apollo and Soviet Soyuz spacecraft into orbit for a historic linkup Thursday.

The Soyuz, guided by cosmonauts Alexei Leonov and Valeri Kubasov, will blast off at 8:20 a.m. EDT from the Baikonour Cosmodrome on the edge of a central Russian desert 1,400 miles southeast of Moscow.

Apollo astronauts Thomas Stafford, Vance Brand and Donald Slayton will take off from Cape Canaveral 7½ hours later at 3:50 p.m. to begin a celestial chase that will end with the two ships joined hundreds of miles above West Germany at 12:15 p.m. Thursday.

Three hours later, a tunnel connecting the vehicles will allow the U.S. commander Stafford and Soviet commander Leonov will shake hands.

The two space veterans have become close friends during two years of training for this mission. Both believe their mission can spend detente between the Soviet Union and the U.S.

The two commanders spoke by long distance telephone Sunday.

Stafford said Leonov and Kubasov told him "that everything was real fine at the Soviet cosmodrome" and he told the cosmonauts that things were good at the Cape, except for "sweating out" the weather.

Meteorologists say the afternoon thunderstorms that have swept the Cape daily are a matter for concern, but the amount of lightning and activity is expected to decrease by Tuesday.

President Ford, Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin, other diplomats and James Fletcher, head of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA), plan to watch televised coverage of the Soviet launch from the state department auditorium. Dobrynin and Fletcher will then fly to Cape Canaveral to see the Apollo launch.

PPDs Quit Portugal's Government

LISBON (AP) — Portugal's second largest political party, the centrist Popular Democrats (PPD), yesterday quit the government because its demands for a free press and other democratic guarantees will not be met, a party official said today.

Coming on the heels of the departure of the Socialists last week, the NDP withdrawal would shatter the civilian coalition in the military-dominated leftist government and leave the Communists as the only civilians in the cabinet.

First International Crew

The five men who compose the crews of the joint American-Soviet Apollo-Soyuz Test Project mission hold a model of an Apollo and Soyuz spacecraft in a docked configuration, recently at the Johnson Space Centre in Houston, Tex. From left are Astronaut Thomas P. Stafford, commander of the American crew; Vance D. Brand, command module pilot; Donald K. Slayton, docking module pilot; Cosmonaut Aleksey A. Lennov, commander of the Soviet crew; and Valeri N. Kubasov, engineer of the Soviet crew. Leonov and Kubasov, along with three Soviet back-up crews, were at the Johnson Space Centre to participate in three weeks of joint crew training. (AP Photo)

Cyclist Injured

BRIGHTON — A Burlington youth fractured a collarbone when he was thrown from his motorcycle Sunday on Highway 401, northeast of here.
A Trenton hospital spokesman said the youth was treated Sunday and released from hospital. Hurt was Richard Arsenault, 18, of Lakeshore Rd., Burlington.
Brighton provincial police said the motorcycle wheels dropped from the roadway onto the gravel shoulder, throwing the youth from the vehicle. The motorcycle flipped several times, causing an estimated $270 damage.

Challenge Landlords Centre Tells Tenants

By ROBIN CHASE
Staff Reporter

The Quinte Information and Assistance Centre here has some tips for both landlords and tenants from the Landlord and Tenant Act in light of the recession — and the rash of rental problems which the centre is investigating.

Bill Hockley, a centre staff member, advises tenants to disregard lawyer's letters written on behalf of the landlord.

He explained Friday some people treat such letters as court decisions due to the language and forcefulness of them. "Consider them just as lawyer's letters and throw them in the garbage because that's all they are," he commented.

Landlords who raise rent — to either force undesirable tenants out or for other reasons — are another source of concern.

Bert Gerling, another centre staff member, says in most cases the landlord raises it in such a way that he can make an additional profit" and not just to cover rising costs.

"It's up to the tenant, serve to resist paying it (an increase)," he said.

Mr. Gerling said if the tenant resists payments and the landlord files a formal eviction notice, the tenant can file a dispute before a county court judge "who would probably ask the landlord to justify each dollar of the increase" and if not satisfied, would likely cancel the eviction and order the rent lowered.

Mr. Hockley pointed out a tenant can dispute a legal eviction in court for any reason if he feels the eviction is not justified.

"Dispute a case in court," he noted. "Because you don't need a lawyer to do it. The tenant should not leave," he added.

Whether there is a lease involved or not, when a tenant has to leave partway through a month, "the landlord must minimize loss" if he imposes an extra month or more rent on the tenant. The tenant to pay rent for the remainder of the month," Mr. Hockley said.

He said for example if a tenant has to leave midway through a month and has paid a full month's rent — and the apartment is immediately rented again — the landlord must return to the former tenant a half month's rent.

Regarding landlords who enter apartments when the tenant is absent, this is prohibited "except by prior written permission in writing 24 hours in advance or by mutual agreement or in the event of a real emergency," Mr. Hockley said.

Mr. Gerling said there are "grey areas" between landlord and the act which can also be disputed in court and whereby legal precedents might be established such as in the cases of restrictions on children, pets, common law or personal habits of apartment seekers — "most of this has really been challenged in court yet."

Damage Extensive

TWEED — A 26-year-old Belleville man has been charged with careless driving following an accident four miles east of the junction of Highways 27 and 7, Sunday, July 13, at 2:40 a.m.
Ernest Cronkright, 26, of 1 Front St., Belleville, alone at the time, was westbound when his car hit a patch of rocks causing the vehicle to roll around landing on the shoulder. He was not injured. Damage was estimated at $1,600.

Cruiser Entered

City police report damage at about $60 after a 24-foot cruiser was forcibly entered sometime during the weekend in Bellevile harbor.
Vandals used a hunting knife and pliers were stolen from the boat.

Car Hits Tree

BRIGHTON —A Brighton woman, Gladys Smart, 58, of 27 Harbor St., was treated for minor injuries and released from Trenton Hospital Sunday after the vehicle she was driving crashed into a tree here.
Brighton OPP said the Smart vehicle went out of control and hit the tree at the intersection of Harbor and Cedar St. Damage was estimated at $800.

Woman Knocked Unconscious

AMELIASBURG — A Belleville woman was treated and released from Belleville General Hospital Sunday afternoon after she fell from her bicycle on Fingerboard Hill on County Road 22 in Ameliasburg.
Nancy Priestly, 19, Sidney St., was cycling on the hill when she fell from her 10-speed machine, striking the road head-first.
She was knocked unconscious by the fall and taken to hospital by ambulance for treatment.

Sack Full of Enthusiasm

Picnics just aren't any fun unless there's a sack race — especially when first prize is a dollar. More than 400 members of the Quinte Italia Canadian Club gathered Sunday at the Mohawk Beach, Shannonville for an ethnic picnic, the first of its kind to be held by the club. Proceeds from the picnic will be forwarded to charities said club executive member Dante Pace.

Thurlow Officials to Queen's Park

Members of the Thurlow Township Council will be in Queen's Park Tuesday to exert pressure on provincial authorities to speed up progress on two local water problems.

In an afternoon session the council will meet with Leo Bernier, minister of natural resources to discuss the water level in the Moira River.

Council has been attempting to have the Moira River Conservation Authority (MRCA) repair two dams in Thurlow Township, saying water loss is too great at the sites.

The two dams, Cannifton and Latta, are both privately owned and the conservation authority has refused to repair them, saying they are not responsible for private property.

In a meeting arranged by MPP Clarke Rollins, Reeve Horace Casey and representatives of the Point Anne water plant project will meet William Newman, minister of Environment, to try to gain new funding for the project.

At a recent council meeting Peter Anderson, an engineer for the consulting firm of Greer, Galloway and Associates, informed the council cost had spiraled to $80,000 from the original estimate of $28,000.

Protestants Mark Victory With Downtown Parade

King Billy led nearly 1,000 Orangemen through the streets of downtown Belleville Saturday — the first such parade to be held here in more than 30 years.

The march of the Protestants marks the anniversary of King William of Orange's defeat of Catholic troops at the Battle of the Boyne in 1690.

A far cry from the 1933 Orange parade in Toronto when 20,000 filled the parade's ranks, the Belleville walk nevertheless had all the necessary ingredients.

Old and young drummers marked time for marchers as they wound along a three-mile route. Fifers played valiantly to be heard above the beat of the drum.

At the same time a special 20-man squad of Belleville policemen tried to hurry the parade through the business section and back to the fairgrounds with the least interruption to heavy, Saturday afternoon traffic.

Some 43 Orange Lodges from Eastern Ontario were represented at the parade.

Lynn Jones, parade marshall, says the lodge is changing its identity and becoming more of a service group.

"We're not as militant as the Orangemen in Ireland" — homeland of all true Orangemen, he said. A local lodge is working on construction of a 100-room senior citizen housing project for Frankford — an indicator of our service work" said Mr. Jones.

Billy Rides Again

On a prancing, off-white horse, King Billy led his 1,000 Protestants through the streets of Belleville Saturday commemorating the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne. Some 43 lodges from eastern Ontario were represented in the parade. King Billy was portrayed by Finley Elmy of Marysville.

Fife and Drum Popular

Whistling out a tuneful note, Jamie Smith of Kingston provides the music while Ward Smallwood of Robin keeps time on a bass drum during Orange Day festivities at the Belleville fair grounds Saturday. Nearly 1,000 turned out to a parade through downtown Belleville.

Rape Not Major Problem

Belleville Police Chief Douglas Crosbie says the number of reported rape incidents in the city over the last few years has not increased "to any appreciable degree" and does not necessitate a special program to deal with rape here.

Chief Crosbie was commenting Saturday on a Friday news item which reported Metropolitan Toronto Police are considering setting up a special rape squad as a result of a 15-per-cent increase in the number of rapes in Toronto this year.

He said the problem in Belleville, as in all places, is that "many rapes are never reported."

He explained victims fear the current rape structure which allows a victim's character to be questioned by defense lawyers and said he applauded the Canadian Law Reform Commission's studies at present which will discover a way to eliminate this practice from court proceedings involving rape.

Missing Pickers Found

MADOC — Four people — including two children — were reported safe early today after they were reported lost in bush-country north of here late Sunday night.

Provincial police said the group had gone picking blue berries early Sunday and when they failed to return an alert was issued.

The were Harold Prest, 33, RR 1 Corbyville, his sister, Mrs. Thelma Goodfellow, of Roslin, and her two children.

They were found in the Cooper area of Madoc Township about 10 miles northeast of here.

Hasty Pee Guard of Honor May Mark End of Red Beret

By COLIN BRUCE

When the Hasty Pees march into Peterborough Tuesday for forming a special honor guard for Ontario Lt.-Gov. Pauline McGibbon it might mark the last wearing of the red berets.

In recent weeks the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment has been notified it is to — hand in the red beret in exchange for the standard green cap, — a directive that has not yet caught the regiment's fancy.

It has been rumored that some of the high ranking leaders of the militia will be attending the Peterborough parade where the question of red or green will come to a head.

"I don't know what's going happen — we'll have to wait and see," said Warrant Officer Carl Ward in charge of the summer training course for the militia here.

"We're one of the last county regiments and people in the area are proud of our red berets — signifying Hasty Pee involvement in European Battle," he said. "If we lose the red beret, we lose part of our tradition."

"We've been told not to wear them but I guess we're going to wear them on the Peterborough parade," he said. "I don't know if it was a direct order but I know it has been mentioned."

Armed Women a First

For the first time, women members of the Hasty Pees will carry weapons on parade when the unit forms an honor guard for Ontario Lt.-Gov. Pauline McGibbon in Peterborough Tuesday.

This summer some 20 female high school students are training with the regiment in its summer employment program. A total of more than 80 students have been hired.

"It's the first time I can ever remember women marching with weapons," said course training officer Warrant Officer Carl Ward. "They're just as good as the men."

Warrant Officer Ward said: "This is the most important thing these people will do all summer.

Prosecutor Delayed

The Belleville court system was in line to receive its first civilian prosecutor to be hired by the province this year but the plight of the economy has delayed the appointment, says City Police Chief Douglas Crosbie.

He told the Belleville Police Commission meeting Saturday, "it had been indicated our court was up for consideration to receive one this year but due to cutbacks we won't be getting one."

Aid for New Church Doubtful Say Officials

St. Thomas' Anglican Church officials are operating on the supposition they will have to get it alone in raising money towards the restoration of the burned-out, 130-year-old sanctuary, says the chairman of the church's building committee.

Harold Carruthers said in a weekend interview no word has been received from the Ontario Heritage Foundation officially to which an application was sent for funds shortly after the church burned on April 30.

Mr. Carruthers said the foundation has not made an outright decision but he added officials were advised in a verbal manner "we were not going to get any great amount."

"We're going on the basis we've got to do it ourselves," he commented.

Mr. Carruthers was asked to comment on a suggestion made by an Intelligencer reader in a May letter in which she said she thought the city should adopt St. Thomas' restoration as a Centennial project.

He indicated this might be considered only as a last resort. "That would be great if the congregation can't swing this itself with a hard, honest-to-goodness campaign," he said.

During the last congregational meeting almost three weeks ago, the building committee was instructed to pare off non-essential costs"from a preliminary architect's drawing of the new church with an initial price tag of $836,000.

Church officials have been eyeing a more realistic figure of $65,000.00.

Police Get EMO Radio

Belleville Police Commission has accepted an offer from Col. Angus Duffy of the nose-to-the-defunct Quinte Emergency Measures Organization to have the QEMO base radio installed at the communications centre in the city police building.

The radio is currently located in QEMO headquarters at Ben Bleecker Auditorium.

Chief Douglas Crosbie said following the commission's Saturday meeting the transfer, which includes a radio tower, "should give two-county coverage" in the event of an emergency.

He said city police would maintain close co-operation with the Tri-County Radio Club which would provide a network in any emergency.

A near tire on a Voyageur bus went flat and caught fire on West Dundas St. near Albert College Sunday night.

City firemen were called to the scene but reported there was little damage.

Splash for Cancer

Lee-Ann Evans, Linda Werden and Iris Stevenright anticipate the splash during a watery version of the ring-toss game at the Wilson residence at 32 Elvina St. Saturday. It was all part of a penny carnival which raised about $30 for the Canadian Cancer Society.

City Police to Get New Radio System

Belleville's police department will soon have a new radio system courtesy of a provincial upgrading program.

The city police commission Saturday perused a copy of a debenture bylaw which will go before the next city council meeting asking aldermen to approve a five-year debenture of $30,000 for the system.

The amount is only one-quarter of the total cost. The province is funding the other 75 per cent.

Total city share including debenture interest will be $40,500. It will cost taxpayers $8,118 per year. Following council approval, the bylaw must receive the sanction of the Ontario Municipal Board.

Chief Douglas Crosbie said following the meeting the move is "part of the province-wide updating of police radio systems".

It will provide a common radio frequency with all police departments in Ontario, he explained.

Bakery Robbed

City police today are seeking two young suspects after a quantity of old bread and cakes were stolen from Canada Bread at 176 East College St. Saturday night.

Police said two young people believed aged eight to 13 years were seen leaving the building around 9 p.m.

Entry was gained to the premises by smashing a window pane.

Group Home Management Course

For those planning to open a group home, Loyalist College is offering an intensive, two-week summer course in Group Home Management.

Group homes are today's alternative to the training school for the juvenile offender, the psychiatric ward for the emotionally disturbed, the hospital-school for the mentally retarded. There is a growing demand for professionally trained directors to manage these homes.

Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Ridley, directors of Wingfield, developed and will teach this course, and have offered their facilities as its setting. Students will have a unique opportunity to consider all aspects of group home management with experienced instructors, in a realistic environment. Morning seminars at Wingfield College will be supplemented with afternoon practicums at the home.

COURSE COMMENCES: August 4, 2 p.m. —Orientation
August 5th - 15th, 9 a.m. - 4 p.m. plus 2 evenings.

Latin American States Remain Divided On Issue of Ending Cuban Sanctions

By JOHN D. HARBRON

Foreign Affairs Analyst

Thomson News Service

The Organization of American States (OAS) meets again in San Jose, Costa Rica on July 16 to discuss the major thorn in the weak body politic of that troubled and divided organization.

The subject is again Cuba and how to end the 11-year-old OAS sanctions against Fidel Castro's revolutionary regime.

The issue is complicated by the fact nine of the 21 OAS members, including Venezuela, the country which called for sanctions against Cuba in the first place in 1964, now have diplomatic and trade relations with Havana.

Against these is a relatively new clique of hard-line, right-wing military states, Brazil, Chile, Uruguay and Paraguay, who are opposed to the ending the sanctions with Marxist Cuba.

Though both Brazil and Paraguay were right-wing military states in 1964, Chile and Uruguay at that time were working social democracies which had great reservations about any OAS sanctions against Havana.

Since 1964, however, in Chile and Uruguay has been destroyed by strongly anti-Communist military regimes.

But the real complication is any termination of economic and diplomatic sanctions against Cuba by the OAS is the structure of the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance, called the Rio Treaty signed in 1947, and which forms the basis of the OAS.

Under that treaty and in particular its Article 17, a two-thirds majority vote of member states is required both for lifting sanctions against a member state, and also to end them.

Since the Rio Treaty was primarily set up to hemispheric security, the embargo against Cuba in 1964 was made because of that country's interference in Venezuelan affairs, allegedly through support of the then-powerful Venezuelan pro-Marxist guerrillas.

The OAS meeting in San Jose will not, therefore, be a meeting of existing member states per se, but a "conference of plenipotentiaries" that is of those member states of the OAS who signed the original Rio Treaty.

This means that OAS member nations formed since 1947 like Jamaica, which reached statehood in 1962 and joined the OAS in 1971, will not be represented.

The purpose of the OAS San Jose conference is to have the 1947 Rio Treaty signatory nations agree a majority vote will amend articles of the treaty instead of the present two thirds majority.

Twelve of the 21 OAS states voted last April in Quito, Ecuador, to end sanctions against Cuba. But under the two thirds rule, it wasn't enough to bring that about.

Under the proposed majority vote rule, 14 votes out of 21 would have brought Cuba back into the fold of the OAS.

Paradoxically, Cuba has not been ejected as an OAS member state since that is not called for in the Rio Treaty. In fact, long before Castro and his Marxist revolution appeared on the scene, Cuba herself was and remains a signatory of the 1947 hemispheric security treaty guaranteeing countries against external political threats, like Communism.

Nor can the new military clique of states, pledged to continued isolation of Marxist Cuba, be sure of their group. Big and booming Brazil, seeking leadership in the hemisphere in place of the United States may decide under the majority vote, if approved at San Jose, to end the sanctions against Havana.

This does not mean that Brazil's capitalistic oriented ruling generals will also commence trade and diplomatic relations with Castro.

But such a Brazilian move could force the United States also to vote against continued OAS sanctions against Cuba even while Washington, with very strong doubts about early U.S. diplomatic recognition of Castro's Cuba.

The United States was the first Latin-American state to break relations with Cuba in January, 1961, doing it unilaterally outside the OAS.

Brazil might decide to vote in support of majority vote, thereby giving the impression she still respects the decisions of the OAS as a hemispheric international organization, which the U.S. has so often ignored.

City Sees Progress

There have been any number of municipal plans, or suggestions from consultants, that have never materialized, in this and other communities, in recent times.

Those that do come to something invariably prove to be plants of sleep growth. Still, there has been no shortage of ideas for a bigger and brighter Belleville, and there are some good ones for the Bay of Quinte waterfront in preliminary recommendations of Toronto consulting engineer Ralph E. Crysler.

Some time ago, in the wake of the demise of the Canada Cement LaFarge plant at Point Anne, and recalling tennis among other sporting activities in its halcyon days as a company village, we had some thoughts on its future.

The idea centered on Point Anne as an ideal place for sportsmen. It is easy to imagine it as a centre for a variety of outdoor activities, from tennis to boating to horseback riding and trail walking.

The consultants report has some ideas for the area too: including the possibility of shifting commercial shipping operations from Belleville to the deeper waters of Point Anne and creation of a conservation area in a marsh area west of the community.

There are other suggestions for the waterfront, including yacht and small boat basins, docks and waterfront walkways to link with riverside parks. It is noted that facilities for walking and cycling are lacking, although the wooded area between College and Bell Boulevard beside the Mall, could be considered an exception. The Kitchener-Waterloo area incidentally, is one which was mentioned recently as having provided bike trails.

In any event, this airing of community and regional potential is a further step in the right direction. In what has been accomplished thus far with industry, expansion of harbor facilities, and at East Zwick's Island, Belleville can point to real progress, and the promise of more to come.

Ottawa Striptease

One of the young Mounties keeping a close eye on things on Parliament Hill recently had a mustache and the look of a Charlie Chaplin in his heyday.

It is doubtful though if the young officer and a colleague saw the humor of the situation when model Michelle d'Orval, sporting only a Canadian flag around her waist, and glitter boots, tried to perform a striptease.

The object of the exercise reportedly was to pose for the centrefold of a Montreal magazine.

When there was more of Miss d'Orval's body showing than there was flag, one of the Mounties said "O.K., that's it." The brunette was bundled up in her coats and taken away for questioning.

Now a question that comes to mind straightaway is, where were the lady cops . . . the fledgling women members of the RCMP, that is? Couldn't Miss d'Orsay have objected to being pawed around by male police?

Other arguments might be presented, for the attention of the guardians of Canada's morality. After all, for a country which leads the most dubious of sex titillation in books and magazines not to mention the most revealing of magazine centrefolds, what's a striptease act on Parliament Hill?

Looking at a two-year-old Globe and Mail front page the other day was also indicative of our mixed-up sense of what is decent or otherwise. Here were five youngsters, 4 and 5-year-olds, three boys and two girls on a field day from their kindergarten class at exclusive Bishop Strachan school in Toronto. It was hot and they slipped into the shallows of the Don River where it ran through a park. All five were stark naked.

Or consider that one can walk along Front Street in downtown Belleville and see in a window display advertising films a picture of a young woman in water up to her waist — and from there on up nary a stitch of clothing.

So many contradictions . . . and so much unconscious humor in it all — from the caper of the police up there on Parliament Hill to the creaky tenets of the federal statute book when it comes to upholding public morality.

Public is 'Fall Guy' in Marketing-Pricing Squeeze

By VINCENT EGAN

Business and Consumer Affairs Analyst

Thomson News Service

Consistency finisher last, when the federal government is dealing with consumers.

The term "marketing" is generally understood to have something to do with salesmanship, but some of the government's numerous marketing boards are busy keeping products off the market so that consumers will have to pay more.

The finance minister has said the government intends to fight inflation, yet it has taken steps to increase sharply the prices of gasoline, heating oil, unemployment insurance and eggs.

John Turner also declared that Canada opposed restrictions on international trade while Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan is considering restrict imports of lower-priced eggs from the United States.

Worse, in the case of egg "marketing", Mr. Whelan imposed his quotas on U.S. eggs with virtually no explanation, and on a Friday afternoon when it was too late for the parliamentary opposition to press for answers.

The agriculture minister's uncharacteristically curtse statement merely said that the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency would assure consumers of ample supplies at reasonable prices.

"Reasonable" is a highly relative and subjective term. Its immediate meaning in Ontario "was a price hike of six cents a dozen."

Just since the beginning of June, consumers have seen the price of eggs—a staple foodstuff—go 25 per cent. That's infinitely like Mother used to make.

Because consumers don't have access to any information about the CEMA operation, says Marvyn Brechin of the Consumers Association of Canada, "they are unable to make decisions about how reasonable are the egg prices that CEMA sets."

Granted, the government has a responsibility to support our agriculture. If the Americans had been dumping their eggs in Canada and undercutting the market of Canadian producers, then Mr. Whelan's course might have been justified.

But nobody on the government side nor on the producers' side has charged U.S. egg exporters with dumping.

A more likely explanation is that CEMA is being run by egg producers primarily for their own benefit. With Mr. Whelan's firm support, they are apparently bent on creating a shortage of eggs so as to "stabilize" that is, increase their selling prices.

The history of CEMA is marked with examples of bungling and something bordering on contempt for consumers.

But the government, clearly, will not tolerate a truly free market.

At the very least, then, Ottawa should require CEMA to implement the recommendations of the parliamentary committee that has investigated the agency's operations, or else explain the delay.

It should make public CEMA's figures on the cost of egg production and also its uniform pricing formula, so that outsiders can judge whether egg prices are reasonable.

And it should put an end to the secrecy surrounding CEMA's operations, and if it remains a bandwagon figure-head.

Sexism - Even At the Zoo

Letter to
The Globe and Mail

I am dismayed to find that, during International Women's Year, women are being treated doing away with sex-roles, the Metropolitan Toronto Zoo is at present showing an advertisement on TV running: "Daddy is going to take us to the zoo tomorrow."

(1) It once again makes Daddy into the person that takes the children on special outings. (2) It makes it extremely difficult for the many sole-support mothers to explain to their children why their Daddy is not about to take them to the zoo tomorrow. (3) Who, but the socially privileged, can afford to take their children to the zoo?

Believe me, I speak from experience. I am a sole-support mother, with a large family. I would love to take my children to the zoo tomorrow, but I'll be working at Interval House, which happens to be a residential distress centre specifically intended for sole-support mothers and their children whose "Daddies" are not about to take their children to the zoo tomorrow, either.

Mrs. Peron Backs Down

Montreal Gazette

Peronism and Mrs. Peron have gone their separate ways. The quarrel, as in so many uneasy marriages, was over money. Mrs. Peron has backed away from her tough line on wage increases, and the General Confederation of Labour has called off its general strike, but after such a confrontation, things can scarcely be the same.

Mrs. Peron matched her presidential authority and her prestige as Juan Peron's political heir against the basically conservative labor movement that was his chief support, and she lost. She retreated, a humiliated figurehead.

Political assassinations—about 500 since Juan Peron was ousted—subsequently highlight the news from Argentina, but the country has been Juan Peron's main problem. Chretien Taking Hard Line on Public Service Strikes—and There May be More

By RICHARD JACKSON

OTTAWA —It looks like the year of the Squeeze.

The federal government on one side, the public service on the other, and in the middle, being hassled as never before, you the taxpayer.

The scenario is simple, even familiar, except that this time both sides — the government and its staff — have come out with the formal declaration that in their confrontation, you are to be the victim.

Treasury Board President Jean Chretien, the man in the Trudeau cabinet charged with curbing government spending, has declared that the days of overstuffed pay increases in the public service are finished.

The government, pledges Chretien, will resist excessive demands.

After years of reckless federal spending, with public service salaries leading the inflationary pay parade, this sounds almost too businesslike to be true.

But Jean Chretien is one of the few "toughies" of the cabinet, and when he says something, it turns out that usually he means it.

He means it this time, too, he swears, and warns that the taxpayers better be prepared for what he calls "some inconvenience."

That, of course, will occur when there are public service strikes and the inflated "demands" Treasury Board may consider excessive.

And you know how inconvenient that can be with the mails stopping, the airports closed, the food inspectors off the job, and key sectors of the intricate transport system slow down.

Many, perhaps most, of the federal staff could go on strike and you would never miss them.

But there are some, strategically placed, who can tie the country in knots.

Even the workers at the Mint could do an excellent jobs of hard the cloak — and toss a monkey wrench in the delicate mechanism of the economy.

They did it last year — you remember the shortage of silver ship nickels, dimes and quarters was felt in each case simply that the banks and accommodation offices had run short of paper money?

Well, that is Treasury Board's side of it.

Now for the public service position.

The alliance, representing 120,000 federal workers, the largest single group in the 300,000-member public service, has learned how profitable a strike can be, except, of course, for the taxpayers.

So it has formed a special committee to study ways of making the strike even more powerful and profitable.

The basic idea is to make the strike hurt.

Hurt the public, that is — secure the government, of course, bring quick and easy compliance with demands, excessive or not.

Alliance leaders, during last winter and spring talks with Treasury Board and trade ministers, tried to coordinate their strike timing to shut down sectors of the public service, where the public would feel it most.

The public felt it, reacted, and the government took fright.

Everyone from the farms where grain backed up, through the rail and road transport system, to people in the urban centres without regular mail or air service, felt it.

The alliance is prepared to use a powerful weapon to pay the lines of members convicted of illegal activity in the course of strikes, legal and illegal.

So the positions have hardened.

Federal public servants are prepared to twist the public's arm.

The Treasury Board appears committed to watching the public squirm.

And the paying public, as usual, can do little — it being between elections — but watch.

Report Shows Sexual Crimes On the Increase in Trenton

By AL ZABAS
Staff Reporter

TRENTON — Rape and other sexual offences more than doubled in 1974 amid a general increase in criminal activity in Trenton, a police report released this weekend reveals.

The report breaks down the nature of 11,723 occurances investigated by Trenton's 28-man police force in 1974 and notes a five per cent rise in offenses covered by Canada's Criminal Code.

Criminal offenses, states the report, rose by 77 to 1,616 last year. Among them was an attempted murder and 12 robberies, up from three in 1974.

Four rape cases were recorded in 1973 figures. Sexual offenses totaled 16 last year compared to nine in 1973.

Car thefts numbered 64 last year and all but two vehicles were retrieved by owners.

Although break and entry offences remained stable at 185, thefts rose 15 per cent to 577 last year over 1973.

The value of stolen property was estimated at $125,000. A high percentage ($115,000) of stolen goods was returned to owners.

Chief Saunders writes that of the detectives' 460 cases, 185 people investigated were "either directly involved or associated with illegal drugs.

He notes that 84 charges were laid in drug related investigations.

"The major investigation,' he says, "was due to intelligence reports that drug trafficking was becoming prevalent in Trenton, and undercover operations were maintained from this source".

Raids April 8th last year of five Trenton residences netted police seven people who were subsequently charged with conspiracy in traffic in marijuana, trafficking in marijuana, mescaline and hashish

Edward Moores, 20, of Ely Minnesota, was trying to climb the 400' rock face in the park when a ledge he was climbing on, broke causing him to fall. He is reported in fair condition in Belleville General Hospital.

Breaking Camp

Royal Canadian Sea Cadet Corps Quinte Peter Beninger of Belleville prepares to leave Bayerest Marina, Big Island. Here he is in the process of folding his tent.

Dinner for 700 Hectic Business

TRENTON — In one of the hot summer kitchens at CFB Trenton, students plunge their arms to their elbows in dishwasher.

Orflip with a destroys hand dozens of hamburger patties on a grill. Or serve meals to cadets from steam tables in the other ranks' mess.

It's all part of the job. Twenty-nine students, three of them cooks, are working at the base for six to eight weeks this summer.

And base food services officer, Capt. Heather Robinson, is pleased with them.

She calls them eager, interested reliable an din possession of "enough energy to do the job."

The work the students do is taxing They are part of a brigade of 60 people hired during the summer to feed an extra 700 mouths daily. Of those 700 mouths, about 530 belong to the cadets at Tent City.

These 60 people, added to the usual food services staff of 50, are divided unequally between the officers' mess (170 and the other ranks' mess (430), where the cadets eat.

That influx of staff presents problems, according to Capt. Robinson.

Of her regular staff, only 15 are military and are therefore supervisors. She says she is forced to stretch her supervisory staff over the civilian staff, it makes for more work, and harder work.

Meals, still "good and substantial", are not as varied. Because of the number of meals to feed and the meal-time deadlines the kitchens face, the choices are restricted.

Missing Tires Found

AMELIASBURGH — A Don Mills man has been charged with possession of stolen goods following recovery of tires reported missing in Ameliasburgh last September.

Anthony Joseph Rohr, was charged after Donald Dulmage, of Ameliasburgh, owner of the tires reported seeing them in the fourth concession of Ameliasburgh, this weekend.

Value of the tires was estimated at $100.

Cadets Set Sail

BIG ISLAND — It was anchors aweigh this weekend as 12 members of the Royal Canadian Sea Cadet Corps Quinte set sail from Bellevile.

Fifteen and made the eight-mile trip to Bayerest Marina, Big Island. The 12 cadets, most of whom were 13 years of age, arrived at the marina in three petrels and one whaler for a Weekend camping expedition.

Purpose of the trip said Commanding Officer Barry Beeryan of Belleville, was to try out the new petrels.

Mr. Beeryan said that the Quinte Sea Cadet Corps functions throughout the year in an effort to instruct the members in seamanship and leadership.

One member, Peter Beninger, Belleville, described the Sea Cadets as "a lot of fun and very educational".

"We have to write exams', said Peter, "and we learn a considerable amount about the different parts of a boat, how to tie knots and the history of the navy."

One Hurt In Crash

ROSSMORE A single-car accident near the junction of County Roads 2 and 28 here at 1.45 a.m. Saturday, resulted in $2,000 damage and one person being admitted to hospital.

Picton OPP said that a car driven by 20-year-old Gerald Talbot of Tdenton went out of control and struck a tree. A passenger, Mary Latham, 18, of RR 2, Carrying Place was taken to Belleville General Hospital and later transferred to Kingston General Hospital.

Mishaps On Rise

TRENTON — Motor vehicle mishaps and personal injuries are on the rise here according to the 1974 annual report released by the Trenton police department this weekend.

Personal injury in the 315 collisions in Trenton in 1974 jumped by 22.5 per cent from 1973. In all, 151 people required some form of treatment for injuries sustained in car collisions.

Only one fatality was recorded last year the same as in 1973.

There were 481 collisions in 1974 up from 364 in 1973. Of these, 166 were classed as "non-reportable", a collision in which damage is less than $200, no one is injured, and no property, other than the vehicles, is damaged.

Non-reportable accidents fell 210 in 1973 while reportable collisions rose than doubled to 315, from 154 in 1973.

Sailboat Hits Shoal

LONG POINT — A Weston, Ont., couple, their daughter and a family friend were rescued Saturday from the shoals of Gull Point near here after their sailboat ran aground.

Peter Jarvis, his wife Beverley, their daughter Nancy and friend Mary Zambon, Toronto, were sailing east when their boat hit a shoal off Gull Point at 10.30 am.

The sailboat was freed from the shoal by Art Minaker of Cherry Valley, who assisted Mr. Jarvis in pulling the vessel off the rocks.

Canoe Stolen

WEST LAKE — Provincial Police in Picton are investigating the theft of a canoe — valued at $200 — from West Lake.

The theft reported during the weekend by the owner of the 16-foot aluminum craft, David McKibbon, West Lake.

Unbaked cookies sound like a great idea for hot weather treats, Sharon Crawford makes these, as did her mother and her mother's mother and they're popular with husband Gord, Mr. and Mrs. Crawford and 18-month-old Chad live on the Old Kingston Road. Camping and snowmobiling are their hobbies.

Unbaked Cookies

three cups oatmeal
one cup shredded coconut
½ cup butter
½ cup milk
two cups sugar
five tbsp cocoa vanilla

In a large bowl, mix oatmeal and coconut. Place butter, milk, sugar and cocoa in a saucepan and bring to a boil. Boil hard exactly two minutes. Remove from heat and add vanilla to taste. Pour liquid over coconut and oatmeal mixture and then drop by teaspoons on waxed paper. Cool.

Do you know any good cooks? The Intelligencer is looking for cooks in the area willing to share their recipes with our readers. If you're a good cook, or if you know one, write The Women's Department, The Intelligencer. Be sure to include his or her address and phone number.

Orangewomen on the March

Nearly 1,000 Orangemen paraded triumphantly through downtown Belleville Saturday, celebrating the Protestant plunder of Catholic forces at the 1690 Battle of the Boyne. Also on parade were the women's affiliate of the Orange Lodge, Ladies Orange Benevolent Association. It was the first such parade to be held in Belleville in more than 20 years.

Sandercock — Weese

The June 21 wedding of Cynthia Kim Weese and George Donald Sandercock took place in Grace United Church in Trenton. Rev. Frank Hobbs officiated at the service.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Weese of RR3, Belleville and the groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Sandercock of RR5, Trenton.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a white satin gown trimmed with white daisies, with a long flowing veil also trimmed with daisies. She carried red sweetheart roses with ivy and baby's breath.

The bride's sister, Debra Weese, was the maid of honor in a blue floral gown. She wore a large floppy hat to match and carried mums and carnations.

Bridesmaids were Joanne Welberall, Karen Dawson and Cathy Ladrew, in gowns the same as the maid of honor's but in yellow, pink and beige respectively. They carried similar flowers and wore similar hats.

Rodney May was the groom's best man, and his ushers were Richard Cunningham, Lee Sandercock and Jim Sandercock.

After a cold buffet at the Trenton Country Club, the newly-married couple travelled west on their honeymoon. They now live at 63 Edward Street, in Trenton.

Kuntze — Reid

On June 14, at Eastminister United Church, Margaret Anne Edith Reid and Richard John Kuntze exchanged wedding vows.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth S. Reid of RR 2 Belleville and the groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Kuntze.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown with a soft molded bodice appliqued around the neckline. The stand-up collar was edged with Alencon lace in a V design and the long sleeves were caught up at the wrist with matching lace. The full skirt fell in soft folds into a chapel train. A headpiece of satin flowers and chiffon petals held a four-tier scalloped shoulder-length veil, and the bouquet was red roses and pink daisy mums.

The matron of honor, Karen Bittle, wore a pink silk gown, a wide-brimmed hat trimmed with daisy mums, and carried matching bouquet in pink and blue flowers.

The bride's attendants, her sister Helen Sills and her sister-in-law Lynn Reid wore matching gowns of blue silk in a floral design and wide-brimmed hats with daisy trim. They each carried bouquets of pink and blue mums.

The best man was Robert Ludolph with Douglas Reid the bride's brother, and Donald Kuntze the groom's brother, serving as ushers.

The reception was held at the Elk's Lodge with a dinner and dance.

The couple travelled to Florida and on their return will reside at 151 Bridge St. E.

Pill Attacked

TORONTO (CP) — Jhon Harrington of Calgary, a part-time marriage counsellor, said Sunday that women, especially those 30 years old and younger, are being exploited by men.

Speaking to a weekend conference of Birthright, an organization with chapters in Canada and the United States which describes itself as offering an alternative to abortion, Mr. Harrington said that "these young girls are being put on the pill and the IUD, and it is all being given to them in the name of freedom."

Mr. Harrington, a father of seven, predicted that girls advised to go on the pill are going to come back in 20 years and they will "become very angry at the medical profession for having sold them out."

Members of Birthright serve as volunteer counsellors to pregnant girls and women in need of shelter and moral support while waiting the birth of reals. their babies.

Art Exhibit Features Women's Work

TORONTO (CP) — The brightly-lit, spacious Shaw-Rimmington Gallery is filled this summer with art works in different mediums at a special show.

One factor is distinct about the exhibit—all the artists are women.

Originally scheduled for a two-week exhibit in recognition of International Women's Year, the 28-women artist show had been extended through to the summer.

"It's the first time so many women artists are under the same roof in such a space," said Marie Shaw-Rimmington, owner of the gallery.

"We didn't do it for material gain. We did it to promote women artists."

The gallery, located on a small city side-street, houses three rooms, a sculpture garden and a top floor.

The exhibit spreads throughout the gallery. Wall hangings, ceramic pottery, lithographs, large paintings, jewelry, quilting and sculptures all blend together.

Some artists volunteered to participate from out-of-town.

Maryon Kantaroff, a well-known sculptor, is exhibiting pieces. Several British Columbia artists are also participating.

Nita Forrest, who founded The Print Gallery in Victoria, is exhibiting water colors. Mary Vaitkuhnas, a former stage actress from Vancouver now living in Toronto, is showing appliqued wall hangings and Gwen Curry from Brentwood Bay displays clothings in the gallery.

Most of the artists have exhibited in other galleries and some of their works are in museums, hospitals and other locations.

Colen Foster, exhibiting woven hangings, said she just completed an International Women's Year arts celebration show.

"Not only are we getting publicity for women artists," she said. "But we are getting attention as artists.

"Once all this focus on women is over, and some are weeded out, I think we'll have an increase of talented artists known."

Several of the artists demonstrated their craft at the gallery exhibit.

The Ontario Hooking Craft Guild demonstrated rug hooking. Alyness Oilbyck showed jewelry making and Didy Erb with Bev Guy gave a craft arts lesson.

Tawny Maclachlan, dressed in a handmade robe she made, sat at a large loom demonstrating weaving techniques. Directly across from her, Elise Blanck cut glass and showed patterns for stained glass masks and mobiles.

A multi-medium art exhibition by 28 women artists at Shaw-Rimmington Gallery in Toronto began as a two-week showing in recognition of International Women's Years. But public response was so great that the exhibition has been extended throughout the season. Sculptor Frances Gage, whose works are presently on exhibit at Shaw-Rimmington Gallery, works on a new piece at her Toronto studio. (CP Photo)

Television's Female Stars Warm and Not Threatening

LOS ANGELES (AP) — What does television have that motion pictures don't? A flock of female superstars.

Women like Mary Tyler Moore, Carol Burnett, Valerie Harper, Cher, Beatrice Arthur, Angie Dickinson, Elizabeth Montgomery, Lucille Ball. They draw huge TV audiences.

There are star actresses in films, certainly, but only one, Barbra Streisand, is considered a heavyweight today in terms of boxoffice drawing power.

Why the disparity?

There are several reasons, including the number and type of films being made these days, but the main reason arises from a basic difference between the two mediums: movies, for most people, tend to be special events while television is a daily fixture.

Movies, with their enormous screens, tend to be bigger than life in both stories and characters. Television material, both in subject matter and treatment, tends to be scaled down to a much more "ordinary" level for the small screen.

The result, contends Ethel Winant, head of casting and talent for CBS, is that women do television can emphasize warmth and vivaciousness rather than glamour and eccentricity, which the big screen seems to demand.

Of the female powerhouses on television, she observes:

"They're all easy to know. They come into your living room as guests and you could conceive of meeting them and sitting down to coffee."

What it boils down to, she believes, is that these women are threatening to the viewers at home — women or men. She illustrates the difference between female movie stars and female television stars for the average woman in the audience this way:

"If Elizabeth Taylor or Barbra Streisand was coming over for dinner, she'd feel like she had to go out and buy a new dress, get her hair done, run next door to borrow a friend's jewelry and get someone else to cook dinner.

"But if Mary or Carol or Bea were coming over, she'd say, Well, I'm serving coffee and cheesecake and they'll understand."

And while men might fantasize about affairs with Faye Dunaway or Julie Christie, says Miss Winant, they also worry about what they would say to such a beautiful woman if they were ever really alone with her.

Not so with the TV stars, she says.

"They're like friends, they're nice; they're enjoyable. You wouldn't have to try to impress them. They're like the girls you might have married, except they're on television."

Film actresses face another disadvantage.

While all of the TV superstars have or have had their own shows, told from their character's point of view, there just aren't many good roles around for women in today's movies.

The emphasis on action and violence has left them in the background, Carol Burnett says of today's movies: "They're all blood and guts—or most of them are. And you're not going to have women doing that because it would look silly. So where else are we going to go but to television?"

'Era Ends' In Schools

CHARLOTTETOWN (CP) — At the end of June this year a pile of the Richford Square School will be transferred to other schools in Charlottetown, ending an era in the city's educational system.

The school on Pownal Street is housed in a converted cotton, one of the oldest landmarks of Christianity in Prince Edward Island.

The central section was built in the late 1700s in St. Andrews, P.E.I. After serving as a parish church for 40 years it was offered to the Bishop of Charlottetown for sale as a school.

Designers Invited

MONTREAL (CP) — Seven leading Canadian fashion designers will show their creations at Yugoslavia's third annual Modefest, the International fashion Festival at Tropic, Yugoslavia, Aug. 10-17. Du Pont of Canada, working with the Fashion Designers' Association of Canada has invited Tom D'Auria, Leo Chevalier, Elvio, Pat McDonagh, Nicola Petty, Michel Robichaud and John Warden to show designs at the event.

Contraceptives Banned

RYADH, Saudia Arabia (AP) — The use of contraceptives here has been banned following a ruling by the World Moslem League that "birth control was invented by the enemies of Islam." Officials said that the decree makes smuggling pills or any contraceptive device into the country, punishable by six months in prison.

Ann Landers

Son Starts School Soon

Dear Ann Landers: I hope all those people who think living together is as good as, or better than, getting married will read this letter—and think again. I am in such a trap and I don't know what to do.

G. and I decided we were in love. He didn't want to get married again after two divorces (one was a real mess), and it was OK with me. That was three years ago.

Our five-year-old son starts school in the fall. His name is the same as mine. I will have to go to school with him and write on the registration blank, "Son of G. L. and G. O. Blank." How will it look?

Whenever I mention marriage, G. says, "I couldn't think of you as my wife. You are my legal wife. Let's not spoil our beautiful relationship by getting married. I did that twice."

He really treats me royally, but I can't help feel crazy about the boy. Tell me what to do.—No-Ring Woman

Dear Woman: Give G. 10 days to make up his mind. Either you get a ring on your finger and that piece of paper in your hand, or it's goodbye. And make it stick.

If he loves you and the boy as much as you say, he'll marry you. If not, it's better that you know it now.

Dear Ann Landers: My brother telephoned me last night, quite upset. He said he had just received a note from the principal of his son's school saying Jerry, who is six years old and in the first grade, is known for picking on the other kids and makes a general nuisance of himself. The principal warned him that if Jerry hasn't settled down by the time school starts in the fall, he will be expelled.

Is it possible to expel a first grader? How can Jerry be helped?—Concerned Uncle

Dear Uncle: A child whose anti-social behavior disrupts the classroom can be expelled no matter what the age.

Obviously your nephew needs counselling and so do his parents. Children who cannot get along with others and misbehave constantly are troubled. They seek attention outside the home because there are so few rewards IN the home.

It would be helpful if you could establish a close relationship with Jerry so when he feels the need for help he can holler "Uncle!"

Dear Ann Landers: I am very fond of a young man who needs psychiatric help. He has moods that are frightening. Sometimes he becomes so depressed I'm afraid he might take his life. Other times he is euphoric beyond description.

His temper is unpredictable. I never know before we meet whether he is going to be cheerful and affectionate, or glum and rejecting.

I've begged him to seek professional help (he can well afford the best) but he refuses. What can I do?—Plenty Worried

Dear P. L.: Nothing. Unless a person recognizes the need and wants to avail himself of it, it's utterly hopeless. This goes for alcoholics, overeaters, chainsmokers—the whole kit and kaboodle. Nobody changes anybody. People have to change themselves. And it's the hardest work there is.

Parties Attack Hike

OTTAWA (CP) — The opposition plans a concerted attack this week on the government's 10-cents-a-gallon excise tax on gasoline for personal use.

Spokesman for the Progressive Conservatives and the New Democrats say the debate may take most, if not all, of the week.

This means there is little hope of the House recessing this week so MPs can go home for summer vacations.

Mitchell Sharp, government House leader, has said he wants the Commons to deal with the excise tax legislation, an changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act, the Public Service Staff Relations Act and the [illegible] before the Commons rises.

While the government wants Parliament to stay in session [illegible] the excise tax becomes [illegible] it will be easier [illegible] progress with the other bills.

PCs to Elect Leader

OTTAWA (CP) — About 2,600 Progressive Conservative delegates will gather in Ottawa next February to choose a successor to Robert Stanfield as party leader.

Mr. Stanfield, 61, will step down at that time after 8½ years as leader. The former Nova Scotia premier, making it clear he will not enter the contest, last week asked the party executive to choose Ottawa over Winnipeg as the location for the convention.

meeting of the 36-member executive committee, said reservations have been made for Feb. 18-22, but added it will not be a five-day convention. Firm dates are to be set later.

Economic and political considerations had led the executive to choose Ottawa over Winnipeg as the location for the convention.

Party Seeks Investigation

ROME (AP) — The Italian Communist party denied Sunday it ever received contributions from the Exxon Corp. and called for a full investigation into the case.

"Not only our hands but also the coffers of the Italian Communist party are clean," the party newspaper Unita said in a front-page editorial.

The United States oil firm said Saturday it had authorized its Italian affiliate, Esso Italiana, to make political contributions of $3 million a year between 1963, and 1971. Another $19 million to $22 million had been made by the managing director of Esso on his own authority, Exxon announced in a statement.

Napanee Repeats as Tourney Champion

The dramatic ending of Saturday's Second annual McDonald's Squirt Softball Tournament could have been right off the stage in Steve Ford-goes-Ahoy, but it was acted out right on the field at Alexander Park.

With a three-run homer in the bottom of the seventh frame by Doug Weese, Napanee Ryan's Color Beauty Sound took the tourney for the second straight year, with a come-from-behind 8-7 win over Aldersvoth, in action from Agincourt in Toronto.

Aldersvoth had gone into the bottom of the seventh, with a 7-5 lead riding on the arm of Ed Kastelik, still fitting the strong game he had thrown throughout.

Mike Foley, the ninth hitter in the Napanee lineup, led off the last stanza for Napanee with a single, with Jackie Wessel moving him to second, pinning first himself with a fielder's choice. Kastelik fanned the next hitter Kelly Bartlett on four pitches, for the second out.

Weese had already pounded a three-run homer in the fifth and a double and single as well, and again came through with the runners on base, counting for four runs-batted-in.

His batting prowess also showed in the team's opener against Richmond Hill where he clouted two doubles and a single for six RBI's, and also threw the win, stopping the strong Richmond Hill team on only four hits while setting 10 down on third strikes.

The Most Valuable Player on the Consolation side of the tourney went to Rick Semenuk of Bridlewood, who belted his team to the final, in allowing eight hits in the final, he at bat pounding out three strikes, walking only one.

He also had two other wins in the tourney, a 5-4 win over Richmond Hill, and an 11-3 victory over Dutch Boards.

In those contests, he had a four hitter and a nine hitter respectively, collecting 14 strikeouts. He clubbed the opening loss to Eringate with Parkie Bailie, striking out five in three innings.

Weese was tops in the hitting department for Napanee, while four others also collected hits, McKittrick Willis, and Foley adding the others.

For Aldersvoth, it was Bellamy with his four bagger, while Bob Rose, Phillip Reid, Kastelik, Wally Gunter and Junior Hayes added a base hit.

Aldersvoth struck out four in picking up the victory, issuing the same total of free passes. He allowed six Aldersvoth hits, Back Richmond started the game on the Aldersvoth ruffner, striking out three before leaving after Weese's home run in the fifth. Kastelik came on to absorb the loss, although striking out six and walking two in two and one-third innings.

Macs' Jim Chase Logs Squad's Fourth Win

By TOM GAVEY
Sports Staff

The Belleville McDonald's proved on Saturday night that, on any given night, one team can beat another, regardless of the standings.

The Macs took the London Dukes 4-0 in the second game of the Ontario Football League doubleheader in London, after losing the first 3-0.

Sunday night in Kitchener nothing seemed to go right for the Belleville squad, as they worked hard, but still came out 5-0 losers.

Kitchener jumped on Scott Reid, Belleville's starter, in the first inning, coming up with a run on Bob Boomgaard's double and John Murdoch's hard hit single and a Belleville error.

Things went downhill from there, as the Tigers further scored another run off Reid and he had to be relieved by Jimmy Chase.

Chase gave up three runs in five innings. He allowed five Kitchener hits and walked three batters.

The loss went to Reid, while the win went to Terry Calderone', who gave up only three hits.

Belleville never got an offensive drive going, as Steve Ling, Carl Boomgaard and Glenn Carlton were the only batters to get safeties, and they never got past second.

In London on Saturday night Belleville pitchers Tim Waite and Jim Chase gave up just three hits in two half games.

In the first game Waite fired two-hitter at Dukes, but still ended up losing 3-0.

The first two London runs scored on an error, with Bruce Everett's single bringing the two runners around.

The other runners hit was a home run by Bob Moggach, his third of the season, to give London the three runs.

Belleville had two hits off Steve Metio Szeryk, Steve Ling and Frank Robinson both singled, while Glenn Carlton got all the way to third in the first inning on Szeryk's throwing error.

In the second game, it was Belleville's turn to jump all over a pitcher, as the Macs scored a run in the first when Lizy singled and moved over to second on Terry Meagher's bunt. Larry Mavely hit a hard single to score Lizy and give the Macs what was to be the winning run.

Chase never had any problems with the London bats, as he silenced them with a non-hit performance.

Chase used an assortment of pitches and his own experience to keep London batters off balance, he only struck out four batters, but he kept the other hitters from anything with substantial power.

The only London hit came from Dick Hames, who came in to relieve Don Denihan, the Duke's starter.

Belleville had one of their best offensive nights to date.

Safeties for the Macs came from Carleton, Ling, Paul Goodfellow, Boomhower and Robinson, all with singles.

Mavely had a double and a single, while Chase hit two singles to help himself to the win.

All in all, it was one of the best games the McDonald's have played all year, and it proved they can go with any team.

As the London Free Press said, "One more year in the league and the Belleville McDonald's will be contenders for first place".

SLICES — Three Belleville players have been named to the East Division all-star team of the Ontario Football League. The game will be played Saturday in St. Catharines.

The three Belleville players are catcher Larry Mavely, who already has four homers to his credit this season, first baseman Frank Robinson and shortstop Paul Goodfellow, who leads the league in doubles, and is second in triples. The three were voted to the team by their fellow players in the OFL, although their own teammates could vote for them.

DAT Investors is a new sports company set up in Belleville and will be helping to finance the Macs. What it is, is a combination of the three people involved. They are Dale Duval and Doug Adams, co-owners of the Macs, and a new partner, Bob Dorotile.

"We plan to back a number of major sports projects over the next few years, said Adams at the venture's first of its kind in the Belleville area.

The Macs have signed a new coach, Don Gavey, who at this time is tied up in family business, and will not be able to join the team until first week when the Macs play here against Toronto. Gavey will assist Harold Ryan, who is the new coach later in the week.

Pitchers Take MVP Awards

Although Aldersvoth pitcher Ed Kastelik was the victim of Doug Weese's seventh inning dramatics for Napanee, he was chosen the Most Valuable Player in the A side of the annual McDonald's Squirt Tournament.

Kastelik appeared to have things under control in the final, going into the bottom of the seventh with a two-run lead before Weese unloaded the shot to centre field. He had taken over for Aldersvoth in the fifth after Weese had tagged starter Buck Hutchings for his first four baggers.

In his two and a third innings in the final game he allowed six hitters, while giving up two hits and walking none, also adding a single to the offensive cause. In their semi-final game with Eringate, Kastelik had stopped them on 3 hits, while picking up nine whiffs. He was deadly at the bat, with a home run, triple, and double, accounting for four runs-batted-in.

His hitting prowess also showed in the team's opener against Richmond Hill where he clouted two doubles and a single for six RBI's, also threw the win, stopping the strong Richmond Hill team on only four hits while setting 10 down on third strikes.

The Most Valuable Player on the Consolation side of the tourney went to Rick Semenuk of Bridlewood, who belted his team to the final, in allowing eight hits in the final, he at bat pounding out three strikes, walking only one.

Branch 99 Peewees Capture Legion Title

PETERBOROUGH — Belleville Branch 99 captured the District championship in the Royal Canadian Legion peewee baseball playoffs here Saturday, blanking Oshawa 2-0 after slipping past Trenton Branch 110 4-3.

The title earns Branch 99 a berth in the Provincial Final Tournament scheduled for Newmarket, August 8-9.

Glen McQuaid provided the heroics for a battling Belleville team in the final with Oshawa.

He got only went the distance to log the win but broke the game open in the first extra inning with a double after the clubs had battled through seven previous frames.

McQuaid finished up with ninty one-hitter while striking out five and walking two.

The ninty Oshawa hit was an eighth inning single by Chris Smith.

Adding Belleville singles to McQuaid's double were Brian Crookright and John Dent.

Each team was charged with only one error in the well-played contest.

Branch 99 was in trouble in the match with Trenton when the Branch 110 squad broke out for a pair of runs in the bottom of the sixth inning to overcome a 3-1 deficit and get an even score. In the fourth, the visite team locked it up with a single scoring run in the seventh.

Winning pitcher Tony Parks went the distance on a six-hit performance. He struck out three and walked two. Steve Smith worked the first six innings for Trenton, holding Belleville to three hits while fanning three and walking two.

Bob Alexander came on in relief in the seventh and claimed three strikeouts while walking one and allowing one hit.

Sharing the winners' hits were Crookright, Dent, Charlie Gordon and Matt Whitley.

Barry McIntosh helped himself to three Trenton singles, while Kim Gilmour a triple while Bruce McCracken and Gerry White each bagged a single.

Peterborough, host for the District playoffs and as winner in 1974, did not field a team for the competition.

Bantams One Win Away

The Belleville Bantam All Star team won two of their three games at the Amesbury Tournament, on the weekend.

The first game was a 5-0 victory over Bramalea, with Tim Soule hurling the victory.

Soule gave up just two hits in the shutout and walked two while striking out 13 batters.

Pat O'Brien of Bramalea was saddled with the loss.

Paul Marinus smacked a homer and, a triple, while Ward Morrison came up with a home run and a single in the win. Andy Rossi hit a double and a single to keep his bat alive.

The second game was a little closer, as Belleville just got by Gall 3-2, with Rick Tripp picking up the win.

Tripp gave up seven hits and no walks while striking out five batters.

Brian Grumett took the loss.

Tripp doubled while Andy Rossi, Morrison and Rob Begg, all singled.

The final game for Belleville was against North Bendale, and they were defeated 7-0.

Soule pitched well, giving up seven hits and five walks, while striking out eight. Belleville made four errors.

The win went to Barry Hett of the North Bendale team. Morrison led the Belleville batsmen with two hits.

Belleville scored three times. He smacked three singles.

Redwood Cup Action

Hellenic Gets Job Done But Olympics Are Nipped

Quinte Hellenic and Belleville Olympics were busy in Premier Soccer Division Redwood Cup play on the weekend. Hellenic scored a 5-2 Saturday win over Toronto Ferma, in Toronto, while Olympics lost 6-3 in Kingston, Sunday, with Portuguese Canadians Kingston scoring twice.

The Hellenic win was decided on penalty shots after the teams finished the regulation 90 minutes all even at 1-1.

Sandy Duckart was the Hellenic marksman in regulation time and he also clicked for one in the penalty shot sudden-death. Others connecting for Hellenic from the penalty spot were Andy Vennos, George Mihalas and Nick Milonas.

In Kingston, Portuguese roared into a 3-0 lead in the first 30 minutes on goals by Peter Landa, Manuel Concecas and Jorge Pinto.

Olympics came right back with a display of power of their own to get free in six minutes with two coming from Mirdrako Pavlov, off the other by Eugene Courtney.

With play well into the second half, Fundic completed the scoring for Olympics the lead but Portuguese battled back to score the winner with time running out to play on a header by Ramos.

In the extra time, Landa put the home side in front from the penalty spot and Fundic wasn't finished yet. He bolted his branch goal of the game to equalize.

Landa sent the lads crowd home in a happy frame of mind when he scored his third goal of the game with time running out.

Foxboro Nips Deseronto

It took a run in the top of the seventh for Foxboro to defeat Deseronto 4-3 in South Hastings Baseball League play on Saturday night.

In other games, Latta defeated Read 8-2 and Plainfield blanked Shannonville 9-0.

Ted Foster and Ron McFatridge pitched the Foxboro win, giving up three hits, three walks and striking out six combined.

Gord Kimmett did a good job for the losers, giving up eight hits while walking three and striking out six batters.

Dave Thomas tripled and singled for the winners, while Farley Vader doubled and singled and Ted Foster had two singles.

Wayne Brant and Donny Brant doubled for the losers.

Bob Reid took the Latta win, giving up three hits and four walks while striking out eight.

The loss went to Mike Fitch, who gave up nine hits and six walks while striking out six.

Ray Rau doubled and singled for the winners, and Reuben Rau singled.

Phil Badgeley had a triple for the losers, while Jim Bartlett singled.

Gordon Adams took the Plainfield win, his third consecutive shutout, striking out 10 batters.

The loss went to Tim Reid and Glen Barbeck,who gave up nine hits and three walks.

John Tweedy had three singles for the winners while Warren Hay came up with two doubles.

Mike Brant singled as did Barbeck for the losers.

BEGINS COMEBACK

SLAVE LAKE, Alta. (CP) — Al Ford of Edmonton, former Canadian and British Empire lightweight boxing champion, began a comeback Saturday night after a 2½-year layoff and posted an easy decision over Jo Jo Jackson of Montreal. Ford knocked Jackson to the canvas with a right to the body in the fourth round of the 10-rounder, considered a tuneup for bigger fights this year with Johnny Summerhays of Brantford, Ont., Reginald Jackson of Philadelphia, and Barry Sponagle of Pictou, N.S., the top challenger.

LED ALL THE WAY

NEW YORK (AP) — Dearly Precious led all the way Sunday to win Belmont Park's Astoria Stakes for two-year-old fillies for her fifth straight victory. The Richard E. Bailey-owned $3,000-winner completed the 5½-furlong race in 1:04.1 and finished a length in front of Ms. Ruby, who was second, and a 13-6 win over Eringate in the semi-final.

Weese was tops in the hitting department for Napanee, while four others also collected hits, McKittrick Willis, and Foley adding the others.

For Aldersvoth, it was Bellamy with his four bagger, while Bob Rose, Phillip Reid, Kastelik, Wally Gunter and Junior Hayes added a base hit.

Aldersvoth struck out four in picking up the victory, issuing the same total of free passes. He allowed six Aldersvoth hits, Back Richmond started the game on the Aldersvoth ruffner, striking out three before leaving after Weese's home run in the fifth. Kastelik came on to absorb the loss, although striking out six and walking two in two and one-third innings.

Evans 'Steals' Game With Alert Running

ATLANTA (AP) — Montreal Expos learned the hard way Sunday never to trust Atlanta's Darrell Evans, who stole a National League baseball game for the Braves with his alert base-running.

The victim was rookie second baseman Pete Mackanin of the Expos, who turned his back on Evans in the 14th inning, allowing the Atlanta third baseman to score the winning run in a 5-4 victory over the Expos.

The win, Atlanta's third in the four-game series with the Expos, was set up when Dusty Baker drew a one-out walk from reliever Don DeMola, 3-4.

After Earl Williams fouled out, Mike Lum drilled a hit to right field and a sliding Evans beat the throw to Larry Parrish at third with Lum taking off for second.

Parrish threw to Mackanin at second trying to get Lum, and Evans kept on running to easily beat Mackinin's throw home.

"I was going right away," explained Evans afterward. "I was already up from sliding

DARRELL EVANS

(into third) when Mike went into second, so I got a good jump.

"He (Mackanin) was waiting, I think, to see if the umpire called Mike safe or out. By that time, he didn't have much chance to get me, because when I took off, Mackanin's back was turned."

Montreal manager Gen Mauch, however, defended his young second baseman.

"I thought Mackanin had dropped the ball, for that's the only way the runner could have been safe," he said. "Mackanin didn't make a mistake in holding the ball, for I'm sure he thought the runner was out, too.

"The umpire just made a slow call."

Williams drove in three of Atlanta's four runs in the first two innings off Montreal starter Steve Rogers on a pair of singles. The other Atlanta run came on an errant pickoff toss by Rogers.

But the Expos, who have now lost six of seven entering the all-star break, tied it in the eighth on Tim Foli's single. Foli also produced a sacrifice fly earlier while Parrish had a run-scoring single and another run came in on a wild pitch.

Can Reds Get Better? Rose Thinks They Will

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Cincinnati Reds have been acting like starving men in a hamburger joint—eating everything in sight.

All their 11 rivals in baseball's National League can hope is that the three-day all-star break that begins today can slow their momentum.

But Cincinnati third baseman Pete Rose said the three-day absence from the diamond will make the Reds' hearts grow even fonder of beating everybody else.

"We've always been a good second-half team," he said. "I don't think we'll do anything but get better.

"We're a hungry team because we've never won it all."

Rose's league-leading two-run single capped a four-run seventh inning Sunday that propelled the Reds to their 10th consecutive victory, a 5-3 triumph over New York Mets.

The win, the Reds' 41st in their last 50 games, also widened their West Division lead to a mind-boggling 12½ games over Los Angeles Dodgers, who were beaten 2-1 by St. Louis

PETE ROSE

Cardinals.

In Sunday's other games, Pittsburgh Pirates lost 7-6 to San Diego Padres but retained their 6½-game East Division edge over Philadelphia Phillies, who lost 9-5 to Houston Astros. Atlanta Braves beat Montreal Expos 5-4 in 14 innings and San Francisco Giants defeated Chicago Cubs 4-1.

On Saturday, the Reds edged New York 3-2, the Cardinals shaded Los Angeles 2-1, the Pirates topped San Diego 6-4, the Phillies beat Houston 2-1, the Braves downed Montreal 9-4 in the first game of a double-header, then lost the second 7-6 and the Cubs downed San Francisco 6-4.

Tom Seaver was cruising along with a 3-0 lead and had allowed the Reds only two singles by Rose before they woke up.

Joe Morgan walked, stole second and scored on Don Driessen's double. Cesar Geronimo and Dave Concepcion then singled for another run and pitcher Terry Crowley drew a walk, loading the bases.

That brought Rose to the plate and Rick Baldwin out of the bullpen.

"I did a little research on Baldwin last week," Rose recalled. "I took my buddies, Greg Luzinski and Larry Bowa (of the Phillies), over to my house and showed them some films. And I asked them about Baldwin."

B.C. Senior Champ

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia All-Stars defeated weary Calgary Jitsumies 4-3 Sunday to capture the Canadian senior baseball tournament.

The Alberta representatives were playing their sixth game in three days and failed to cap a string of victories that brought them from the consolation round of the tournament to the final.

After losing to B.C. Friday, Calgary beat Ontario, Manitoba and New Brunswick representatives to advance to Sunday's final.

They defeated the previously-unbeaten B.C. side 4-1 to force an extra game in the double-knockout tournament but fatigue got to the defending champions.

"No question about that," said Alberta manager John Kirk. "Our guys were just dead out there in the final."

A's Are Pulling Away

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Oakland A's are starting to pull away from the pack.

Baseball's three-time world champions are not only first in the American League West at the all-star break—but they're first by a whopping 8½ games.

"The pressure is on the other teams now," said Oakland's Bill North after the A's beat the Baltimore Orioles 4-3 Sunday and increased their lead.

The second place Royals dropped another notch behind the A's by losing an 8-4 decision to Detroit Tigers in another Sunday game. Boston Red Sox improved their lead in the East to 4½ games by whipping Texas Rangers 10-4.

In Sunday's other American League games, Cleveland Indians nipped California Angels 9-7 and Chicago White Sox stopped Milwaukee Brewers 5-6.

Rain forced postponement of action between Minnesota and New York. They were to have completed a game suspended because of the league curfew Saturday night before their regularly-scheduled game.

The Yankees and Twins were tied 6-6 after 14 innings in the Saturday game, in Saturday's other games, Oakland whipped Baltimore 7-1, Detroit blasted Kansas City 8-4, Boston walloped Texas 10-4, Cleveland trimmed California 9-4, and Milwaukee edged Chicago 5-4.

Jarvis Redfearn had three hits and started two rallies as Detroit erased a three-run deficit in the first inning and went on to beat Kansas City.

Rodriguez doubled off loser Dennis Leonard, 9-5, and scored the Tigers' first run on Gary Sutherland's sacrifice fly in the third. He added singles in the next two innings when the Tigers had four and three-run rallies.

His big sensation Fred Lynn drove in four runs and veteran Carl Yastrzemski had five successive hits, leading Boston over Texas for the Red Sox' seventh consecutive victory.

Duane Kuiper's tie-breaking single and Buddy Bell's two-run double highlighted a three-run seventh inning that helped Cleveland beat California.

It was Cleveland's 19th win in a row over the Angels in Anaheim, equalling the American League mark for consecutive victories against one team on the road.

The New York Yankees did it to the old St. Louis Browns 13 times during 1939-40.

Wilbur Wood pitched a three-hitter and Nyls Nyman drove in two runs, leading Chicago over Milwaukee. Chicago gave Wood, 7-13, all the offense he needed with four runs in the fourth inning.

American League Out for Revenge

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Baseball's 46th all-star game will be staged here Tuesday night with the American League once again seeking to end a National League domination of the mid-season showdown.

AL president Lee MacPhail pledged an all-out effort to beat the Nationals in last summer's game at Pittsburgh's Three Rivers Stadium. But the NL prevailed with a 7-2 victory to give it a 36-18 edge with one tie in the series that started in 1933. The Nationals have made the game a virtual one-league show for the last dozen years, winning 11 times to take control in a series they once trailed 13-4.

The Americans will attempt to end their all-star frustration with an Oakland A's-New York Yankee dominated lineup featuring five first-time starters against an NL cast that is made up almost entirely of Los Angeles Dodgers and Cincinnati Reds and is virtually the same one that began last year's game.

The first-time AL starters will be three Yankees, catcher Thurman Munson, outfielder Bobby Bonds and third baseman Craig Nettles, along with two Oakland players, catcher Gene Tenace and outfielder Joe Rudi.

The other AL starters are two more A's, outfielder Reggie Jackson and shortstop Bert Campaneris, and second baseman Rod Carew of Minnesota, whose 3,184,614 votes was the highest total for any player in fan balloting.

Opposing the AL starters will be a starting NL lineup populated almost completely by the Reds and Dodgers. Cincinnati's contingent is headed by catcher Johnny Bench, who led all NL players with 2,929,167 votes. The other Reds are Pete Rose in the outfield and the second base-shortstop combination of Joe Morgan and Dave Concepcion.

From the Dodgers, fans picked first baseman Steve Garvey, the most valuable player in last year's game and third baseman Ron Cey and outfielder Jimmy Wynn, breaking the Dodger-Red control of the NL starting team was outfielder Lou Brock of St. Louis Cardinals.

Except for Concepcion and Brock, the NL lineup is the same one that started last year. Concepcion beat out Philadelphia's Larry Bowa, last year's starter at shortstop, and Brock replaced Hank Aaron, traded to the American League Milwaukee Brewers during the winter.

Opposing managers Walt Alston of the NL and Alvin Dark of the AL will name their starting pitchers Monday. Alston picked three Dodgers, Don Sutton, Mike Marshall and Andy Messersmith and Mike Marshall, to head his staff against a lineup that includes Jon Matlack of New York Mets, Tug McGraw of Philadelphia, Jerry Reuss of Pittsburgh, Phil Niekro of Atlanta and Randy Jones of San Diego.

Dark's pitchers include two of his Oakland hurlers, Vida Blue and Rollie Fingers, along with Jim Hunter of the Yankees, Baltimore's Jim Palmer, Nolan Ryan of California and Chicago City's Steve Busby and Jim Kaat and Rich Gossage of the Chicago White Sox.

Bowerman Third in CPGA

Tape Under Pressure But Refuses to Wilt

TORONTO (CP) — As far as Bill Tape is concerned, ignorance is bliss, especially for a young golfer facing the pressure of trying to beat out veteran George Knudson for first money in the Canadian Professional Golfers' Association championship.

Tape, 28-year-old pro from the National Club at Woodbridge, Ont., charged from three strokes behind to overtake the 39-year-old Knudson on the final five holes of the 72-hole tournament Sunday at Bayview Golf and Country Club.

But he had no thanks for the spectators who informed him that he had drawn even with Knudson on 16 and that, when he got to 18, all he needed was a par to win his first CPGA crown.

"I'd rather have not known," he said. There was enough pressure without the knowledge. When I got to 18 and learned I was one stroke ahead, my heart started pounding twice as fast. But what I was waiting to putt, I had a little talk with myself.

"I told myself that even if I missed, there would be a playoff and that took a little pressure off."

As it turned out, he rolled in his three-foot putt and walked off the green to claim his $7,000 first prize, his biggest payday in seven years as a pro, along with the Labatt's Cup.

Knudson, who has won eight United States pro tournaments and nearly $500,000 during his pro career, had to settle for the $5,250 second prize.

Tape, who came to the final round leading Knudson and Gary Cowan of Toronto (formerly of Belleville) by two strokes, had a winning score of 67-71-69-69—276, nine under par on the 6,645-yard par-71 course.

Knudson, who was 10 under par after an eagle on the 492-yard par-five second and birdies on 4, 11 and 12, saw his lead disappear with bogeys on the par-four 4th-yard 18th—"not my favorite hole"—and the par-four 385-yard 18th. His scores were 66-70-69-69—276.

In third place, another stroke back, was Bowerman whose 72-70-67-69—278 earned him $3,500 but, more important, an automatic berth in the Canadian Open in Montreal on July 24-27.

Moe Norman of Gilford, Ont., Bob Rose of Hamilton and Wilf Homenuik of Winnipeg tied for fourth with 280 and each won $2,250. Norman decided he did not want to play in the Canadian Open and passed up a chance to play off with Rose and Homenuik for the final exemption, won by Rose on the second hole.

Bob Panasiuk of Windsor, Ont., who tied for sixth with Frank Whibley at 281, also had a Canadian Open exemption along with Knudson and winner Tape.

Tape, whose only previous Canadian professional tour victory was last year's Manitoba Open, said he thought he had overcome any hope of winning when he bogeyed the 13th, but he birdied 14 and 15 and when Knudson got into the sand and blasted 16 feet past the pin on 16, it was all tied.

Knudson, not wanting to make the same mistake as on Saturday when his second shot was short on 18, hit a eight-iron over the green. His ball hit a spectator and bounced back, saving him from an almost impossible chip.

He still put his third shot eight feet past the pin and when his putt curled past the hole, it left Tape needing only a par to win.

Mann the Leader; Rain Halts Play

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Carol Mann had a one-shot lead over Jan Ferraris when play was suspended Sunday in the final round of a rain-interrupted $65,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament.

There were three threesomes still on the Riviera Country Club course when Bill Hall, LPGA tournament supervisor, called play. The nine pros returned at 10 a.m. today.

Miss Ferraris, who started the last nine holes trailing Miss Mann by two shots, caught up with the LPGA president with a birdie on the 15th hole, but two holes later, she bogeyed a bogey.

Miss Mann, the first and second-round leader, stood seven under par for the tournament, one stroke ahead of Miss Ferraris.

She was one over for the first round.

Miss Ferraris was three under par for the day and seven under for the tournament.

Carol Jo Skala finished with a two-under-par 70 and was the clubhouse leader at 211, five under par.

The stroke back at 212 was Australian Penny Pulz and JoAnne Carner. Both fired 70s for the final 18 holes.

At 213 were Sandra Palmer, who had 71, and Jocelyne Bourassa of Shawinigan, in with a closing 69.

Sandra Post, formerly of Oakville, Ont., was one over par with a 217 after shooting a 74 in Sunday's round and a 72 Saturday.

Warriors Stop Excelsiors

VIRGIL, Ont. (CP) — Niagara-Brantford Warriors defeated first-place Brampton Excelsiors 23-10 Sunday in an Ontario Lacrosse Association Major game.

The Warriors held a 4-3 lead after the first period and increased the margin to 12-9 after two periods.

Al Thompson and John Moodrian led the winners with five goals each. Mike French scored three, Leo Newelands, John Hoculik, Tony Gollan and Willy Walker two each and Bob Simpson once.

Cindy Nicholas – Channel Challenge

Tides May Postpone Swim

TORONTO (CP) — A bid by Cindy Nicholas of Toronto to swim the English Channel this month could be cancelled or at least postponed because of low temperatures and unsuitable tides.

The 17-year-old high school student, who swam Lake Ontario in record time last summer, flew to London on Sunday night to check channel conditions first-hand. She was accompanied by her father, Jim Nicholas.

"Cindy planned to swim the Channel on July 27," her mother said Sunday night in a telephone interview. "But the trainer we've arranged for in Folkestone told us by phone that the tides won't be favorable that day.

"She could go any day from July 17 to 21, if the water warms up and the tides are right."

Mrs. Nicholas said the current water temperature in the Channel is about 15 degrees Celsius but that her daughter would like it to be at least 18.

Miss Nicholas has set a deadline of "early August" as the latest she would challenge the Channel this year.

Winning Boxer Dies

MONTERREY, Mexico (CP) — A young boxer, whose fighting licence had been withdrawn because he had taken too many punches, has died after appearing in the ring under a false name.

Alfonso Diaz Garcia, 22, was a preliminary fighter when he lost his licence. On Friday his manager put him in a 10-round main bout here under the name Jose Luis Garcia—and he won over local boxer Abraham Saucedo.

But hours after leaving the ring, Diaz Garcia was rushed to a hospital to be operated on for a cerebral hematoma, and died.

The boxer's manager, who was reported to have abandoned his fighter in hospital, was being sought in connection with responsibility for Diaz Garcia's death.

British Open

Watson's Eagle Just One Better

CARNOUSTIE, Scotland (AP) — Any golfer who birdies Carnoustie's feared par-five 14th hole can feel pleased with himself.

Jack Newton of Australia did it in Sunday's playoff for the British Open. But Tom Watson went him one better. He gagled it.

Watson, who was earning a history of choking in major tournaments, went on to win the crown and he said his eagle chip at the 14th was the stroke that counted the most toward the title.

"I hit a good wood into my second shot, and it landed in short grass just off the green, about 30 feet from the pin," Watson said. "I took a chipping wedge for my third shot and it ended in the hole."

Watson went on to a one-under-par 71 over the 7,065-yard, par-72 course and edged Newton by one stroke.

Carnoustie is a dragon when the wind comes up, but for the first three days there was scarcely a breath of wind. Watson had scodes of 71, 67 and 69 on the first three rounds. Newton shot 69, 71 and a course record 65.

Then a westerly wind came up, and in the fourth round, the lead was up for grabs as player after player bowed to the cold breeze. Watson made 72 and Newton 74.

The scores put them even at 279, one stroke ahead of Jack Nicklaus, Johnny Miller and Neil Coles, and they went to an 18-hole playoff.

Sunday the wind blew again, this from the east.

In the playoff, Watson took the lead with a birdie on the second, then scored two strokes out in front when Newton, an Australian pro who plays the European circuit, bogeyed the third. But Watson bogeyed the fifth and Newton evened it with a birdie on the sixth.

They made the turn in par 36.

Newton, who like Watson is 25 and virtually unknown on the international circuit, led briefly when he birdied the 12th, but he lost a stroke at 13.

Then came the 14th which was played with such perfection that either player should have had reason to puff up with pride. As it turned out, the eagle was the margin Watson needed.

He bogeyed the 16th, sending the playoff to the wire.

By the time the two approached No. 18, rain splashed the course and sent many of the spectators scurrying to tents to watch the finale on television.

Watson played it in par. Newton blasted from a bunker beside the green and needed a 15-foot putt to send the playoff into more extra holes.

He missed by inches.

The title, the first major victory in nearly four years as a professional for Watson, as did the $16,500 first prize. Newton earned the course record and $13,200 as runner-up.

Genois Over Power

HAMILTON (CP) — Dale Power was apologetic after losing to Rejean Genois of Quebec in Sunday's singles final in the Ontario Open tennis tournament.

"I'm sorry, Rejean," Power told his opponent. "I didn't give you a very good game."

The Quebec-based Genois, unseeded in the tournament, took little more than an hour to defeat Power of Toronto, No. 2 seed, 6-2, 6-1.

A one-year layoff cost Genois seeding in the tournament. He was Canada's top-seeded player in 1973 and fourth-ranked this year.

To get to Sunday's final, he upset Don McCormick of Vancouver, No. 1 seed in the tournament and tops in the national rankings.

On Saturday, Genois downed Harry Fritz of the United States 6-2, 6-3 and Power was strong in a 6-4, 7-6 triumph over No. 3 seed John Sharpe of Toronto.

"I was really feeling good out there today," said Genois. "I thought I was moving around and hitting out there today better than I have in a long time this week."

In Sunday's other final, Jane O'Hara of Toronto overcame a weak first set to down Susan Slone of Vancouver 4-6, 6-2, 6-3 to take the women's title.

In doubles finals, Harry and Guy Fritz overcame Genois and Richard Legendre of Quebec 7-6, 6-2 and Miss O'Hara and Aleida Spee of the U.S. defeated Mrs. Slone and Andree Martin of Montreal 6-3, 7-4.

After losing her first set, Miss O'Hara played her last two sets in almost flawless style, forcing Mrs. Slone to make a number of errors.

Wings Upset By Bolts

BOSTON (CP) — Ivan Thompson and Brian Davidson scored four goals each Sunday night as Boston Bolts upset Philadelphia Wings 19-14 in National Lacrosse League action.

Charlie Marlowe contributed three goals to the Boston attack, while Jim Watson and Terry Lloyd had three goals apiece for the Wings. Philadelphia's John Grant scored one and set up six others.

The Bolts had a 46-47 edge in shots on goal in the game before 2,023 fans. Each team was assessed three minor penalties.

Diane Jones Goes over the Bar

Saskatoon Star Takes Pentathlon

WINNIPEG (CP) — Diane Jones of Saskatoon won four of five events to win the women's pentathlon Sunday at the first Canada Inter-regional Decathlon-Pentathlon Championships.

Jones accumulated 4,407 points while finishing first in the 100-metre hurdles, shot put, high jump, long jump. In the 200 metres, she tied for third with a time of 25.4 seconds.

Her sister, Joanne, placed second in the over-all standings with 3,852 points, followed by Liz McHatt of Edmonton with 3,723 points.

Jones' performance also led the Prairies to victory in the team standings with 10,054 points. Ontario finished second with 10,704 points and Quebec third with 10,063 points. British Columbia was the other region represented in the two-day championships.

All three women, plus fourth-place finisher Sue Summers of Ontario, earned the right to represent Canada in the pentathlon at a track meet in Eugene, Ore., Aug. 9 and 10 against the United States, Soviet Union and Poland.

In the men's division, John Gamble of London, Ont., took individual honors in the 10-event decathlon with 6,074 points. Gord Graham of B.C. was second with 6,326 points and Al Northcott of Ontario third with 6,233 points.

Gamble gained the win by placing first in the 1,500 metres, second in the javelin, and third in both the 400 metres and shot put. He also tied for second in the high jump with a leap of 1.85 metres.

Ontario took top spot in the team standings followed by the Prairies and Quebec.

WINS TRIO

MONTREAL (CP) — Ted Grygier of Ottawa won all three races for no penalty points during the weekend to win the Quebec open shark sailing championship on the nearby Lake of Two Mountains. Maurice St. Onge of Montreal was second with two third-place finishes and a fourth and 19.4 points. Andre Julien, also of Montreal, finished third with two seconds and an eighth and 20 points.

WINS CHAMPIONSHIP

QUEBEC (CP) — Andre Gagne of Quebec City shot a two-under-par 70 Sunday to win the Duke of Kent golf championship with a record 20-hole total of 138. Gagne's performance erased the mark of 140 set in 1972 by Dan Talbot of Beauceville, Que., and gave him his second title. He also won in 1966. Myles Saunders of Pembroke, Ont., shot a 69 Sunday to tie for second with Henry Setlakwe of Thetford Mines, Que., who had a second-round 71.

RALLIES IN STRETCH

YONKERS, N.Y. (AP) — Nickawampus Leroy, last in the field of six after one mile, rallied in the stretch Saturday night to win the 1½-mile, $75,000-Old Glory Pace at Yonkers Raceway. Nickawampus Leroy, driven by George Phalen, covered the distance in 2:06 2-5 and paid $10, $4.40 and $3. Keystone Smartie finished second, one-half length back, and returned $4.60 and $3.60. Young Quinn, who led until being overtaken in the stretch, faded to third. Fourth was Otato Hanover, followed by Sir Dalrae and Timmy Lobell.

Listless Ti-Cats Losers

HAMILTON, Ont. (CP) — Hamilton Tiger-Cats suffered what quarterback Bill Eiter called "a total team breakdown" and took a 28-6 trounncing from Calgary Stampeders in a Canadian Football League exhibition game Saturday.

Game statistics reflect the Stampeders' advantage more accurately than the score. Calgary had a total offence of 452 yards and 27 first downs to Hamilton's 73 yards and four first downs.

Eiter, ineffective during most of the first half, ascribed his team's defeat to a lack of vitality rather than talent.

"We just looked like we were punching time clocks," he said.

Hamilton managed all four of its first downs during a one-minute stretch late in the second quarter. They had possession in Calgary's territory for five of the game's 134 plays.

The closest the Ticats got to scoring was the Stampeders' 19-yard line, after a fumble recovery by new linebacker Octavus Morgan, where an Eiter pass was intercepted by defensive back Greg Hare.

In contrast, the Calgary offense overwhelmed the Hamilton defence, under the poised, precise command of quarterbacks Joe Picarek and Karl Douglas.

To add to the aggravation, Hamilton players Dave Easley and Bill Danychuk were injured.

Easley, a defensive back, broke his left arm and will be out of action for six weeks. Danychuk, a defensive tackle, broke a bone in the base of his left thumb, but should be ready to play in the Ticats' regular-season opener July 23 against Montreal.

Biggest man on the night was Calgary's 200-pound running back Willie Burden. He carried 23 times for 160 yards and caught four passes for 43 more. He scored one touchdown and had another disallowed.

Rookie import Mark Green scored Calgary's other touchdown.

Left-footed placekicker Cyril McFall kicked three field goals and route to a 13-point evening. He also kicked two converts and two singles. Ron Southwick's 71-yard single rounded out the scoring.

Hamilton now has an 0-5 record in pre-season play.

Napoles Retains Title

MEXICO CITY (AP) — World Boxing Council welterweight champion Jose Napoles retained his title Saturday night by pounding out a 15-round decision over challenger Armando Muniz of Los Angeles. Both boxers were bloodied at the finish. Napoles dominated the bout from the party going. He knocked down Muniz with 10 seconds to go in the eighth round with a right jab and a left hook. It was Napoles' 14th defence of the title he won seven years ago and the 81st professional fight of his 17-year boxing career.

First we built a mid-size car inside. Then we built a sub-compact around it.

Most cars are built the other way around. Body style first, passenger comfort second. Which is why in the back seat of so many cars, your head slants forward. Or your knees meet your chest. Or you shift positions sitting over the hump every time you hit a bump.

At Honda, we've virtually eliminated these problems. Because we designed our car from the inside out. What we ended up with is a sub-compact car with as much room as some mid-size cars. The experts have described our car best.

"Many makes talk about small on the outside, big on the inside, but Honda has done it." (Road and Track).

How it we did it? Our car's shape is trapezoidal. A rectangle that's wider at the bottom than the top for all kinds of good reasons. For example, we give you more room where you really need it. More leg room on the floor and more seating room.

Another part of our roominess story is also a performance story. We gave our car front-wheel drive, not just to eliminate the hump inside, but for its excellent road-hugging ability.

Then we mounted the engine sideways to provide even more space. This also places the engine weight directly over the drive wheels for better traction. For added comfort, we equipped the Civic with a McPherson strut suspension, independent on all four wheels, for a stable yet comfortable ride.

The Honda Civic is more car than you'd expect. It's fast and yet it's economical to run. In fact, in the 1975 U.S. Environmental Protection Agency gas mileage test, the Honda Civic recorded a remarkable 41.2 miles per gallon for highway driving and 33.6 miles per gallon for in-city driving. Now, just try and find another car that performed as well.

CP News Roundup

Miss Canada Arrives

SANTA ANA, El Salvador (AP) — A crowd controlled by combat-armed troops waited several hours in the hot sun to welcome three young women competing for the title of Miss Universe in this small Central American country.

Hear Appeal

NEW DELHI (AP) — The Supreme Court decided today to begin hearings Aug. 11 on Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's appeal against her conviction for violating election laws.

Rip Van Winkle?

GENOA, Italy (Reuter) — A man who vanished from his home near here nearly 30 years ago and was declared legally dead, was found asleep on a bench at the Genoa railway station Saturday night.

Police said they identified Alberto Thoesca, 49, from a 1946 identity card which he was still carrying.

Security Tightened

LA GRANDE RIVIERE, Que. (CP) — Security measures were tightened Sunday at the LG-2 dam site when Prime Minister Trudeau and Jean-Pierre Goyer, federal supply and services minister, toured the James Bay hydroelectric project by helicopter.

McVean Recovers

NORTH BAY, Ont. (CP) — Bill McVean, a broadcaster with radio station CFRB in Toronto, is in satisfactory condition in North Bay Civic Hospital following the crash of his Nieuport Scout aircraft at the North Bay air show Saturday afternoon.

Kennedy Charged

WOODSTOCK, Va. (AP) — David Kennedy, 20, son of the late senator Robert Kennedy, was charged with reckless driving and failure to have a driver's license and auto registration in his possession Saturday night, police said.

Security Uncertain

MONTREAL (CP) — The participation of Canadian troops in security for the 1976 Summer Olympic Games is still being discussed and no firm decisions have been made on its extent or nature, Canadian Forces spokesman said Sunday.

Nurses Settle

TORONTO (CP) — A settlement between the Ontario Nurses Association and 104 hospitals was reached late Saturday under the guidance of provincial mediator Ray Hilling.

The tentative settlement has to be ratified by the 19,000 nurses and the board of governors for each hospital. No date for a ratification vote has been indicated.

200 Die

NEW DELHI (Reuter) — At least 200 persons have died and more than a million are homeless after two weeks of monsoon floods affecting large areas of Northern India and parts of the south, latest reports said.

Gains Independence

LISBON (AP) — Portugal's tiny island colony of Sao Tome off West Africa received its independence Saturday after 500 years of Portuguese rule.

Prince Helps

LONDON (AP) — The Sunday Telegraph says Prince Charles has been secretly working and spending his own money to rescue delinquents and poor youngsters from drifting into crime.

Editors Protest

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The American Society of Newspaper Editors has asked Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi to stop requiring United States news correspondents to observe her country's censorship laws as a condition for remaining there.

Attendance Down

CALGARY (CP) — The 1975 edition of the Calgary Stampede ended Saturday with attendance well below expectations, even though this is the city's centennial year.

Lottery May Extend Beyond 1976 Games

MONTREAL (CP) — The Olympic lottery "has been so successful that it "will continue a long time after" the 1976 Olympic Games, Mayor Jean Drapeau said Saturday.

The lottery, which had been forecast to produce $23 million, has surpassed expectations and revenue estimates now are up to $227 million, he said in a radio interview.

Mr. Drapeau also said there was no contradiction between his statement to the International Olympic Committee last May and the statement to the parliamentary commission recently citing the amount of work lost due to the recent construction strike at the 1976 Olympic Games site.

In May he said that the construction project was not behind schedule. The president of the construction firm told the municipal affairs standing committee in the national assembly Wednesday that the 11-week delay in work can easily be made up and the project had not been adversely affected.

Mayor Drapeau said the statements were not contradictory but that they complemented each other. His statement had been misinterpreted.

The "modest" increase in the cost was not unrealistic, because of skyrocketing costs everywhere. For example, he said, the French-language newspaper La Presse has raised the cost of its newspaper three and a half times the price it was three years ago.

It was three years ago, he said, that he made the first estimate of costs for the Olympics. The original cost estimate of $310 million has been raised to $714.8 million.

Foreign Cars Cheaper in U.S.

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — British, West German and Italian cars are being dumped in the United States at prices below cost, the president of the United Auto Workers Union (UAW) said Saturday.

Leonard Woodcock called for an investigation by the treasury department and for "due relief" for American car workers.

He said foreign cars that might have been dumped on the American market were the 1975 Volkswagen Rabbit, British Leyland's 1974 Austin Madina and the 1975 Fiat 128 Coupe.

The 1975 Rabbit two-door models with a 1500-cubic-centimetre engine has a current factory price in West Germany of $4,407, he said. The port of entry retail price of the car in the U.S. was $3,230, including ocean freight and import fees.

Leyland's 1974 Austin Marina four-door de luxe model carried a factory price of approximately $2,884 in Britain, compared with $2,459 in the U.S.

The Fiat model cost $3,295 wholesale in Italy, compared with the U.S. port of entry retail price of $2,357, he said.

Woodcock said the disparities are even greater when the cost of several hundred dollars worth of government-mandated pollution control and safety equipment—not required in the manufacturing countries — are taken into account.

In London, British Leyland denied it is dumping cars on the United States market at prices below cost.

Referring to the allegation that the company is selling the 1974 Marina for about $400 less than in Britain, a spokesman said British Leyland only started offering cut-price incentives in the U.S. when other firms there did so.

Michigan Solves Welfare

BAY CITY, Mich. (AP) — A plan to pay welfare recipients $5,000 each to leave the state is being considered by a group of economic experts, says the chairman of the Michigan Manpower Council.

Dr. Daniil Kruger, a professor of industrial relations at Michigan State University, told the summer meeting of the Michigan Press Association that Michigan is antitipating about 100,000 new welfare enrollees in the next six months.

Kruger, in a speech before the association Friday, said those favoring the enticement include himself, Dr. John Dempsey, director of state social services, and Wilbur Cohen, a University of Michigan economist and former official in the federal department of health, education and welfare.

The economists are considering ways to reduce welfare rolls, Kruger said.

Talks Open Tuesday

OTTAWA (CP) — Another round of federal-provincial negotiations on communications opens here Tuesday and Communications Minister Gerard Pelletier hopes it will be the last full-scale conference on the subject.

The two-day conference is the third meeting of communications ministers aimed at reaching agreement on the form and extent of what will be greater provincial involvement in the regulation of communications, hitherto a federal preserve.

It is an extension of a May meeting at which the provincial ministers promoted the "consensus proposals" that sought provincial jurisdiction over most aspects of cable systems, telephone and telecommunications carriers operating primarily within a province and licensing of all "local" broadcasting within a province.

Inco Strike Settlement Outlook Still Bleak

SUDBURY, Ont. (CP) — The outlook for an early settlement of the five-day strike at the International Nickel Co. of Canada Ltd. (Inco) remained uncertain this weekend as the 13,500 employees began hearing details of a tentative agreement signed Thursday in Toronto.

Negotiators for Local 6500, United Steelworkers of America, ended a three-week silence Saturday morning at a meeting of about 300 shop stewards who voted almost unanimously to reject the agreement.

Reaction was mixed Sunday among the 2,500 men who attended the first of eight membership meetings.

One steward said the general feeling of the men is that the contract was not particularly good, even though the terms are fairly close to their bargaining team's lost proposal.

BIRTHS

PERRON — To Linda and Bob, a son, Mark Gwayne, born Friday, July 12, 1974 at Belleville General Hospital, to grandmother Mrs. Ruth Perron of Marmora, Belleville and fifth grandchild for Col. A. J. and Mrs. Perron, Sidney, Quebec City.

PAYNE — Dan and Juanita Payne (nee Vail) would like to thank Cole Hill Nursing Home and Dr. Ross and Joann Allen, born on July 12, 1974, weighing 6 lbs., 7 ozs. Proud grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Ray Payne and Mr. and Mrs. Hilbert Vail and great grandparents, Mrs. Ivy George Payne.

IN MEMORIAM

JEFFREY — In loving memory of my dear wife Lily Jeffrey who passed away July 15, 1973.
How our sorrowed hearts would have ached
To lay world to longer wait,
But our precious Lord had called her,
To a far more glorious home.
If is sad to walk this road alone,
Without her by my side,
But to all there comes that moment
When the wave of life divide,
Our loved ones are not far away,
God just took them to His heavenly home,
And left the door ajar.
—Sadly missed by her husband John.

SHARPE — In loving memory of a dear daughter, sister and aunt, Sister Joyce Sharpe, who passed away suddenly July 15, 1971.
Our tenderness has been broken,
Our hearts have bled and wept
For those we've parted for a while,
We know we'll meet again.
Some day we'll see our loved one,
Some day we know we will meet,
Some day we'll be in Heaven land,
Never to part again.
—Sadly missed and always remembered by her sister, brothers and sisters, nephews and one niece.

ADAMS — In loving memory of a dear husband and father, Robert Adams, who passed away June 15, 1964.
No one knows our heartaches,
Only those who have had can tell,
Of the grief we bear in silence,
Of the tears we secretly shed,
Fondlyongly remembered by his wife Ethel and family.

CARDS OF THANKS

Starts Quail Ranch

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Quail inc., started just a little more than a year ago by Hank Bogardus, sells quail and quail eggs to dining establishments and Bogardus says he expects to have 70,000 quail for sale nationwide this year. Pickled eggs can be a substitute for a martini olive, he said.

Alberta Development Body in Small Town

PONOKA, Alta. (CP) — Moving the head office of the Alberta Opportunity Co., a Crown corporation, here from Edmonton as part of a decentralization program has paid great dividends both in its business operation and its staff morale, says 44-year-old Ed Clarke.

Mr. Clarke, the firm's managing director, gave up his job with Ontario Development Corp. to take the position. He said it was not hard to relinquish a 60-mile daily round-trip commuting to Toronto on the Queen Elizabeth Highway for the "delight" of a 30-minute walk each way to and from his office.

"Most of the people in town drive wherever they want to go, and they think I'm nuts because I walk," he said.

The initial concerns about the decision to move faded quickly and the re-staffing-of-the-office period was relatively short and the firm now is able to devote full attention to the financing needs of Alberta businesses.

When the decision was made in January, 1973, to move to this central Alberta community of 4,500 people 60 miles south of Edmonton, a survey was made of the staff's attitude to moving.

For many reasons, 85 per cent of the staff decided against the move so jobs had to be better than the ones they held were quickly found for them in other government departments or the private sector, he said.

"Then we found that the school system here is excellent in training clerical skills and our staff is made up of about one-third clerical people."

Mr. Clarke said the Ponoka schools graduate 150 to 200 students with clerical skills each year.

"They're terrific and we get the pick of the crop."

That problem was resolved "by people that already were here."

But the most startling revelations came when Mr. Clarke started to recruit management and loans officers — semi-professional people.

"When we talked with groups of them, there would usually be one outstanding in the group who said his best promotion would be to Toronto or Montreal and that he didn't want to go and, besides, he didn't really like big cities," he said.

"As a result, we've picked up 15 or 20 of the smartest young moneylenders in Alberta from banks, finance companies and other such institutions."

Mr. Clarke said he has been "delighted with the calibre of people we've been able to attract."

He emphasized the staff attitude by saying that last summer there were four branch manager's positions to fill from the head office ranks here.

"We had trouble getting our people here to take promotions because they didn't want to leave Ponoka. In fact, one refused and he's still here and, as happy as a lark."

And the move had been beneficial to the firm's business activity.

"What really tickled me is that we have an excellent air charter service here and we can fly most distances over 100 miles more cheaply than we can drive," he said.

After an applicant files, the firm's staff representative will go to his location—any where in Alberta—if it decides the application has merit.

"So it means we can get there faster and cheaper," Mr. Clarke said.

"Logistically, it's been a tremendous benefit. The firm originally was funded to $50 million and, last fall, this amount was increased by another $50 million.

Mr. Clarke is enthusiastic about the delights of "small-town living."

"It's had great being able to hear the small birds chirping outside the office window."

In other moves at decentralizing government offices, the Alberta government moved the Agricultural Development Corp. to Camrose, the agriculture department's breads and licensing section to Stettler, the dairy division to Vermilion, the hail and crop insurance branch to Lacombe, the weather modification section to Three Hills and its data processing centre's key-punch operation to Red Deer.

The government now intends to establish an environmental laboratory and research centre at Vegreville.

Game by Game

BELLEVILLE 5
SCARBOROUGH CORVETTE
PARK 4

The best team started out in an inhospitable fashion by pounding out 12 hits to dump Scarborough in the opener of the tourney. John Ramsey led the way with a double and two singles with Dave Phillips, Stephen Smith, and Billy Curry each adding two singles each. Allan Thompson fanned seven batters in his victory, allowing only six hits. Mike Kehoe's was tagged with the loss, whiffing five.

UNIONVILLE 11
AMHERSTVIEW 6

Seven Amherstview errors, combined with a one-hit pitching performance by Unionville's Jim Hawley put Amherstview on the consolation side. Hawley added five strikeouts in the five inning contest, walking only two. Good Carpenter had a home run and single to lead the winners, with Grant Manley adding a double and single.

NAPANEE 21
GLENFIELD 1

Seven runs in the fourth and four more in the fifth and final frame gave Napanee the first win of four in the tourney. Sending 11 men to the plate in the fourth, they collected seven of their 12 hits in the game, with Kelly Bartlett leading the way with a home run and single. Scott Thompson checked in with a triple and single, with the only Glenfield hits, both singles, going to Herb Silverstein.

SCARBOROUGH CEDAR
SPRINGBROOK 1

Paul Gilroy spun a one-hitter over five innings on the Scarborough rubber as his teammates had 13 hits of their own for the pasting of Springbrook. Gilroy helped his cause by batting three times in three trips to pace the winners, with Gilroy adding a double and single to his own cause.

WOODSTOCK 18
NORTH BENDALE 13

Sloppy play on both sides of the field, along with 18 hits in the game accounted for the 31-run total. Although Woodstock could come up with only 13 of the hits, they received the benefit of seven errors, while committing nine themselves. Dave Skinner was tops at 4th plate for the winners, with a triple and single, with Darcy Perrier striking three times for the losers.

ERINGATE 11,
BRIDLEWOOD 1

Eleven hits accounted for the same total of runs in the five inning game paced by Eringate. Brent Montgomery pounded a home run, two doubles, and a single to lead the winners, while Toni Koskiwski singled twice. John Eastman threw a one-hitter in taking the win, striking out five and walking three. Chuck Hart had the only hit for the losers, a second inning four-bagger.

ALDERWOOD 19
RICHMOND HILL 4

Greg Walton had a home run, double and single as part of a 14th inning attack while Ed Kastelik added a pair of doubles and a single to his four hit pitching performance in the Alderwood win. Five other players had a pair of hits each, while four players connected for singles for Richmond Hill. Kastelik struck out 19 in taking the win, with Paul Sarazin and Garry Sutherland being tagged with the loss.

CORVETTE PARK 21,
AMHERSTVIEW 1

The Scarborough team scored 12 runs in the top of the first inning and never looked back in the shellacking of Amherstview, pounding out 21 hits in the process. Darian Letros had a home run, two doubles and a single to lead the way, hitting in nine runs and scoring four himself. Larry Chisolm had a two hitter in the victory, fanning four in the five inning game.

SPINGBROOK 8,
GLENFIELD 1

Springbrook bounced back from the first round defeat to eliminate Glenfield on a two hitter by Gary Finch, who had eight strikeouts to go along with only two walks. Bill Blakely had a triple, and single, with Brian Reid and Rodney Cooey each stroking two singles. Herb Silverstein had both hits for the losers, both singles.

BELLEVILLE 10,
UNIONVILLE 5

Unionville had a 6-2 lead going to the bottom of the sixth, but the home towners came back with a six-run uprising on eight hits for the win. Dennis Tam had three singles for the winners, with Dave Phillips adding a pair of hits. Each team committed six errors, with Allan Thompson and Angelo Lentini sharing the win.

NAPANEE 3
CEDAR HILL 0

In only the second shutout of the tourney, Napanee took the win with all three runs coming in the top of the fifth inning. Mike Foley allowed only four baserunners in pitching a brilliant one-hitter. He walked two, while one other reached base on an error. Napanee had three hits, all singles.

BRIDLEWOOD 11,
NORTH BENDALE 3

Bridlewood collected 11 runs with only 10 hits, while North Bendale could manage only five off winner Rick Senecoak. Tim Reffle led the way with a home run and double, while Eric Jones contributed a double and single in a losing cause for North Bendale.

ERINGATE 16,
WOODSTOCK 4

Eringate pounded out 15 hits in the win, with Brent Montgomery cloaling a pair of triples and a single with four repeated in, with Dave Hart adding three singles. Dave Gilmore and John Eastman had a four-hitter with three strikeouts in the winning pitchers. The losers committed four errors in the five inning game.

SPRINGBROOK 8
CORVETTE PARK 1

Springbrook made it in the B championship game, with this win over Scarborough, advancing against Bridlewood. Bryce Rowe had a home run and single to pace the eight-hit attack, with Brian Reid also connecting for a four bagger. Rowe gave up only a single to Phil Prentice in taking the win.

NAPANEE 21
BELLEVILLE 9

Belleville bowed out of their own country as Napanee piled up a 7-3 lead after one inning of play, making it 21-4 after two. Danny Weese had a pair of triples and two singles to pace the 21-hit slugfest for Napanee, with Terry Whalen stroking a home run and single. Mike Finn and Mike Foley shared the win, allowing nine Belleville hits. John Ramsey hit a home run and double for the losers.

RICHMOND HILL 4

Bridlewood walked until the bottom of the sixth to put away the victory with a single run, after scoring four in the fifth, on nine hits in the game. Craig Hurl had three of the nine, all singles. Rick Senecoak took the win, giving up seven hits while striking eight.

ALDERWOOD 12
ERINGATE 4

Alderwood won a berth in the A championship game against Napanee in doubling the score over Eringate. The winners pounded out 15 hits, 12 of them singles while Eringate had only 5. Phillip Reid had three for the winners, while Brent Terry Koziowski drove three safeties for the losers.

SPRINGBROOK 1

Bridlewood racked up 13 hits in the B championship game to take the decision from the tired Springbrook club. Craig Duff had a double and three singles for the winners, with Tim Reffle banging a pair of three-run homeruns. Rick Senecoak was on the mound for his third win in four games, striking out nine and walking one. Bryce Rowe and Garry Finch shared the loss, combining for six strikeouts.

NAPANEE 3
ALDERWOOD 7

Doug Weese's second three-run home run of the game, with two on board in the top of the seventh, finished off the seventy as Napanee carried home the A championship for the second year in a row. Weese added a double and single to his homer's, batting in a total of seven of the eight runs in four trips to the plate. Keevin McDonald fired the win for Napanee, striking out four in a six-hit performance with Ed Kastelik and Buck Hutchings fanning nine in defeat.

Wall Clarifies New Contract

An ad hoc arbitration board, headed by Justice Willard Estey, has ruled in the dispute between Ontario's 5,500 community college teachers and the provincial government for a contract which should have started Sept. 1, 1973 and will end Aug. 31 this year.

The final award reaffirms the interim salary decision announced March 17 and finalizes the remaining outstanding issues such as definition of the academic year, vacations, workload, merit increments and salary adjustments for some classifications.

However, Paul Wall, Loyalist College teacher local president, said Thursday there has been a discrepancy in some news reports due to misinterpretation of a final award for instructors. He said instructors have been never considered as the entire teaching staff.

Mr. Wall explained instructors are the bottom level of faculty classification. Some colleges have five levels and others only two, but instructors are at the bottom in both cases.

He said instructors initially received the same eight per cent salary hike that all teachers were given for 1973-74 but the final award added another 7.75 per cent for a total of 15.75 per cent to eliminate the disparity between the five-and-two-level systems.

Other final award highlights:

In addition to the March increase, the top two levels of librarians received an additional increase of $400 on Sept. 1, 1974, and another one of $500 on Sept. 1 1974.

Teaching staff vacations will be two months, subject to the 10 per cent bonus practice where only one month of vacation is allowed, provided the arrangement is voluntary.

Your Horoscope

By BERNICE BEDE OSOL
For Tuesday, July 15

ARIES (March 21 - April 19) Not the most harmonious day in the home. If an argument develops, better to back off. The odds are against you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Avoid working with tools or mechanical devices if possible today. You tend to be careless. Serious consequences could result.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Don't attempt anything risky, or if the outcome depends on chance. You're irresponsible today and will make a wrong, costly choice.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You'll be bearing the burdens of others today. Unfortunately, they won't appreciate what you do in their behalf.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Recharge your batteries by withdrawing to a quiet place alone. You're not in the mood for fun and games.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Be wary of a friend who approaches you for a loan. It's possible you could lose the money and the friend, too.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Through no fault of yours you could lose face among associates in an area which means a lot to you. It's just bad luck.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24 - Nov. 22) Your perception is way off-base today. It would be wise to avoid analyzing another's motives. You'll only embarrass yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec 21) An outspoken friend will unthinkingly cause a rift between you and your loved one, or split you and another pair.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Refrain from making any agreement or contract today. You'll be dealing in good faith. Others won't.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) You'll be long on words, but short on deeds today. You'll promise yourself no this and accomplish little.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Someone may try to talk you into attending a social function. If you go, you'll spend a lot of money on a being time.

Opening lead — Q ♥

By OSWALD and JAMES JACOBY

Jim: "In the language of kids, any bid of one less than game 'is a strong invitation to partner to go on to game. In most cases if you want to play it as a force, you won't get into trouble."

Oswald: "In standard American, South's two notrump rebid is just a strong invitation, but not quite a force. In Jacoby modern we go along with the best current practice and play it as a force to game, except if partner rebids to three of his minor suit, we can drop him there."

Jim: "South's opening bid is just about a jack above a minimum, but North's two ove one response has promised at least ten points. South properly elects to rebid in two notrump."

Oswald: "Even if North does not play the two notrump bid as a force, he should go on to tickets three notrump. You might as well try for something worth while rather than go after a part score."

Jim: "There is little to the play of the hand. South takes the first heart, tries the diamond finesse and wraps up three notrump when it succeeds."

Oswald: "If it had failed, he would have been down one, but year in and year out you win by bidding even-money games."

Ask the doctors

What is the correct opening bid vulnerable with:
♠ A K Q J 7 6 ♥ A 2 ♦ 6 4 ♣ 5 3 2 ?

The correct opening bid either vulnerable or not vulnerable is one spade. There is no good reason to preempt when you hold two aces and your hand is not strong enough for a forcing opening bid. Of course, you will jump at your next turn if partner responds.

Harrbor Open

BEDWELL HARBOR, B.C. (CP) — Canada's customs station in the Gulf Islands is open until Sept. 28 this year. Operating in summer only, the port is a favorite checking point for yachtsmen cruising the San Juan and Gulf Islands. Boats and float planes are served at the harbor.

Licence Renewed

EDMONTON — — Aided by a pair of new glasses, 90-year-old Nick Rawluk of Willingdon, Alta., has his driver's licence renewed. One of the few octogenarians still behind the wheel, Mr. Rawluk has completed a 37-year driving record without even a single parking ticket.

Tennis Champ At 54

CAMBRIDGESHIRE, England (CP) — Miss Daphne Portway has won a county tennis championship for the eighth time at the age of 54. She has been playing for 29 years and was 40 when she first won the county title. She said: "Age doesn't matter so long as you keep yourself fit."

Farmer a Double

TRINITY, Jersey (CP) — Farmer David Dixon is becoming used to being addressed as Lord Lucan. Tall, dark-haired Dixon is the image of the missing earl, wanted by an inquest jury as the murderer of his children's nanny. Sandra Rivett, at his wife's home in Newmarket, Suffolk. If so much like the earl it is wondering if anybody would like him for a film on the case.

Soyuz in Orbit, Apollo Ready

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A two-man Soyuz ship rocketed away from earth today on the first of twin launchings that aim for an historic linkup in space between Soviet cosmonauts and United States astronauts.

A rocket lifted Alexei Leonov and Valeri Kubasov into orbit from the Baikonur Cosmodrome on the edge of a central Russian desert 1,400 miles south-east of Moscow.

Liftoff was on schedule at 8:20 am. EDT. Ten minutes later the Soviet flight control centre near Moscow reported Soyuz was in an orbit ranging from 131 to 141 miles high—almost precisely the path desired.

Leonov and Kubasov reported they were feeling well and said all systems aboard their space ship were performing properly.

At Cape Canaveral, half a world away, the countdown continued on the Saturn rocket which was to send Apollo astronauts Thomas Stafford, Vance Brand and Donald Slayton in pursuit of the Soviet craft at 3:50 p.m. today.

Because of their late liftoff, the astronauts were still in bed and did not watch the Soviet launch on television. They were to see a videotape replay over the traditional launch-day breakfast of steak and eggs.

For the first time, the Soviet Union provided live television coverage of one of its launchings to the rest of the world. But Western reporters were barred from the launch site at Baikonur.

Millions watched as the rocket lifted away from its launch pad and carved a fiery path in a clear sky, pitching quickly over toward the north east.

The booster accelerated rapidly and pushed Soyuz into orbit at more than 17,000 miles an hour.

As the rocket rose, flight control provided news centres in Moscow, Cape Canaveral and Houston with a running commentary, using such phrases as "the engines are stable. The crew reports first-stage shutdown and third-stage ignition."

There were no direct comments from the crew.

Once in orbit, Soyuz spread its two solar panels, which collect heat from the sun and convert it to energy.

"Have a happy flight," the control centre communicator told the cosmonauts as they flew out of radio range of the first tracking station.

Earlier, a worldwide audience had a ringside seat as the cosmonauts arrived at the launching pad and Commander Leonov saluted the government commission overseeing the launch, saying:

"The crew of Soyuz is ready for the pilot flight with the American spaceship Apollo.

"We are ready for flight and a successful return to earth," a voice replied, but the speaker was not shown.

As the cosmonauts mounted the steps to the elevator for the trip to the top of the 150-foot, three-stage rocket, an unidentified voice called out the Russian expression for "good luck."

Leonov replied with the customary Russian response: "To the devil."

They checked out systems aboard the spacecraft, found no problems, and spent the final minutes before launching listening to music played over their communication system.

No Barrier

TORONTO (CP) — The housing industry's "Berlin Wall" will be held back by new provincial environmental assessment legislation, Environment Minister William Newman said Monday.

He told the legislature that the proposed law will have "no restrictive effect on the house building in the province and will not hinder or delay any environmentally-acceptable undertaking.

Board Bucks Hydro

TORONTO (CP) — An advisory board to Ontario Energy Board has criticized Ontario Hydro's expansion plans saying: "It's like building a Gardiner Expressway wide enough so you'll have congestion only one day in 10 years."

The Gardiner is a Toronto expressway.

The expansion plans are a factor in Hydro's bid for a rate increase that until Friday was about 30 per cent. The board was told Friday Hydro would submit a reduced request early in August.

Rewards Offered

Trenton Man Fights 'Crazy' Vandalism

By AL ZABAR
Staff Reporter

TRENTON — Damage to downtown Trenton businesses has prompted a local restaurant agent to embark on a program of offering rewards for the arrest and conviction of vandals.

Agent Jack Whitley announced Monday he will offer a reward to anyone that helps police convict a vandal.

"I'm sick and tired of them destroying property," Mr. Whitley said angrily, calling the damage "crazy and senseless vandalism".

The straw that broke his patience came this weekend and is directly responsible for the reward policy he believes is the first in the Quinte area. He said the size of the reward will likely change, dependent on the circumstances in each case.

Mr. Whitley has offered a $100 reward for the conviction of the person or persons who broke the glass door of the former egg grading station on Albert St., a property he owns.

The door was smashed Sunday morning and the estimated replacement would cost more than $70.

Along with the glass door, two maple trees in planters outside the downtown Bank of Montreal were snapped, one in half. Replacement cost for the trees is estimated at $55 apiece.

A bank spokesman said Monday it is the first time trees have been broken. He said that although the bank will likely replace the broken trees this time, "we'd certainly back off if this persists".

Mr. Whitley said "This is just the beginning. I can't excuse for that kind of thing."

He said he hopes the reward will help decrease the rate of vandalism in Trenton, both the business and homes: "I hope it will encourage people to be more responsible."

A reward will be established in all properties owned by Mr. Whitley or in which his insurance agency has an interest.

He said the policy is working in the United States where a special telephone number is used to provide information to callers, and in the larger cities. His agency has been considering establishment of the reward system for some time, he said.

In setting up the program, Mr. Whitley said it implied no criticism of the Trenton police department.

Police are doing "a hell of a job" but on a Friday or Saturday night "it's hard for them to be in all places at one time".

Delay Setting Parley Date

Town Evacuated

PORT HOPE SIMPSON, Nfld. (CP) — Two hundred women, children and elderly residents spent Monday night at St. Mary's Harbor, about 25 miles south of here, as the men stayed behind to fight a forest fire raging near this community in southern Labrador. The residents were evacuated on the Canadian vessel Petite Fort.

Trudeau Visits Crees

FORT GEORGE, Que. (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau made a surprise visit Monday to this Cree Indian village at the mouth of the LaGrande River. The 1,700 Crees and 50 Eskimos living in the James Bay community will lose much of their traditional fishing and hunting area when the largest hydroelectric project in North America is completed. Mr. Trudeau stayed for a couple of hours.

More Join Strike

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont. (CP) — About 350 workers at the Abitibi Paper Co. Ltd. newsprint mill in Smooth Rock Falls went on strike today, bringing to about 2,700 the number of workers on strike at five Abitibi plants in Northern Ontario.

U.S. Gas Price to Go Up

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford's proposal to end price controls on domestic oils could increase the cost of gasoline by seven cents a gallon in the United States and raise consumer prices by nearly one per cent, administration spokesmen say. The over-all impact would cost the average family $200 a year in higher energy prices. Administration officials say this is the price the U.S. must pay to increase its supplies of domestically produced oil to conserve energy

Refugee Status Sought

MONTREAL (CP) — Dang Van Quang, a former South Vietnamese general facing a deportation order, fled a claim of refugee status Monday seeking to have the order quashed by the Immigration appeal board.

A.S.T.P. (Apollo Soyuz Test Project)

Cape Canaveral Is Crowded For Last Launch of Apollo

CAPE CANAVERAL (AP)

As the zero hour neared for the Apollo launch, thousands streamed into the Cape Canaveral area. Many were bound by the fact Apollo-Soyuz will be the last U.S. man-in-space effort for at least four years, when a next generation rocket plane called a Shuttle is to be ready.

President Ford, Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin and other diplomats and NASA Administrator James Fletcher watched the television coverage of the Soyuz launch at the state department auditorium. Dobrynin and Fletcher then flew to Cape Canaveral for the Apollo launch.

Ford told the state department audience "marks the beginning of a very epic adventure into space. We are blazing a new trail of space co-operation that demonstrates the United States and Soviet Union are prepared to co-operate toward a common end."

Much symbolism and prestige is involved in this first joint flight of the two superpowers who battled for space supremacy through the late 1950s and 1960s until Americans landed on the moon in 1969.

Neither wants to fail in the global spotlight that will follow every moment.

As Apollo enters orbit, Soyuz will be 4,140 miles ahead, over Belgrade, Yugoslavia.

The more sophisticated Apollo, with commander Stafford at the controls, is to conduct all the tricky manoeuvres to gradually close the gap and bring the two ships to an historic linkup 140 miles above West Germany at 12:15 p.m. Thursday.

Astronauts and cosmonauts will spar in a mission of detente, representing two countries once keen rivals in space.

Three hours after the spaceships dock Thursday, both ends of a connecting tunnel will open and the U.S. commander, Stafford, and the Russian commander, Leonov, will embrace.

It won't be just a handshake in the sky, say the astronauts and cosmonauts, but a mission that will further detente and lead to future co-operative flights in large space stations and perhaps to the moon.

Brand, the U.S. command-module pilot, calls the mission a "springboard for detente. Where detente will go is not clear to me, but I think we're off to a good start."

Kubasov, the brilliant Soyuz flight engineer, said a major objective of the flight is to test a common docking mechanism developed by engineers of both countries for Apollo and Soyuz.

"Maybe in the future such a device could be used for helping other American and Soviet spacecraft," he said. "Or it could possibly aid in rescuing stranded spacecraft, or one experiencing a problem."

"For the first time ambassadors of our two countries will meet in space," Leonov stated. "This will demonstrate to all of mankind that both nations are striving for peace on earth."

"Space is an expensive place to explore," said commander Stafford. "By exploring it together we can cut down the cost substantially."

The five spacemen have become friends during two years of training. They have shared many earthly adventures and have learned to speak the language of the other.

The rule during the linkup in American speak Russian, Russians speak English.

Key personnel in the flight control centres of each country also have become proficient in the other's language.

Once hooked in orbit, Apollo and Soyuz will remain together for about 47 hours. They will visit each other's spacecraft, share meals and exchange flags, letters from their leaders and surprise gifts.

They also will conduct five joint medical and scientific experiments, including a metal smelting test in a space furnace aboard Apollo.

Leonov, an accomplished artist, plans to record his impressions while orbiting the earth. He did about 10 pictures during a 1965 flight when he became the first man to walk in space.

After two days of togetherness, the spacemen will hold a televised news conference from orbit, answering questions from reporters in Moscow and at Houston's Johnson Space Centre.

Then the two spaceships will disengage, move apart and link up again, this time Soyuz acting as the active vehicle.

Then, they will undock for the last time on Saturday and Soyuz will return to earth Monday at 6:51 p.m., landing in eastern Russia.

Apollo, with its longer stay in power, will remain in orbit three additional days for experimental work. Splashdown is scheduled in the Pacific Ocean west of Hawaii at 5:18 p.m., Tuesday.

That will mark the last ocean splashdown for the U.S. manned space program, the last flight of the Apollo spacecraft, which successfully transported 12 astronauts on moon-landing missions, and the last American manned flight until at least 1979.

Nixon Not Invited

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Richard Nixon, the man who set in motion the final plans for the Apollo-Soyuz space flight, was not invited to attend the launch today of the United States spaceship.

Nixon signed a treaty for the U.S.-Soviet mission May 24, 1972.

Macdonald Asks Price Of Oil

OTTAWA (CP) — Energy Minister Donald Macdonald has asked oil companies to review by Monday their pricing plan to raise prices because of a $1.30-a-barrel increase in crude oil.

He is a memo to company officials Monday, he requested there be no increases until Aug. 15. That is the date when refineries are expected to run out of stocks on hand July 1 when crude oil prices were raised to a barrel from $6.50.

But he asks all companies to say by today how much their prices will go up, "regardless of the effective date" of increases.

Mr. Macdonald, who released copies of his memo, said any price increases caused by increased operating costs should not be implemented at the same time as prices increases associated with the new price of crude oil.

June Jobless Rises Slightly

OTTAWA (CP) — Unemployment was up slightly in June as the rate for the country as a whole rose to 7.2 per cent from 7.1 in May and the same as the rate in April.

The number of available jobs increased in June but the number of those working or looking for work grew slightly faster.

The total without jobs was 704,000.

For those 24 and younger the unemployment rate went to 12.6 per cent from 12.5 while for the 25-and-older group the rate was unchanged, at 5.2 per cent.

The greatest improvement in employment was in Nova Scotia, where the unemployment rate fell to 7.3 per cent from 10.2.

British Columbia had the greatest increase in unemployment rate—to 8.3 per cent from 7.6.

Little change had been expected in the unemployment rate, which forecasters predict will rise more later in the year.

The Canadian Labor Force Survey is predicting rates of between 7.7 and eight per cent in the coming months.

Russell Bell, CLC research director, said job prospects generally are light at the end of a recession.

"At times like this management does not take on new employees — they simply utilize more efficiently employees they already have," he said.

Student unemployment in June was high compared with the two previous years. Of the 718,000 in the student labor market, 14.4 per cent were unemployed. A year ago the student unemployment rate was 14 per cent and in June, 1973, it was 11.3 per cent.

The 7.3-per-cent overall unemployment rate is adjusted for seasonal factors. Economists consider seasonally adjusted rates better indicators of performance of the economy.

Paint Has No Business Being on Ladder

By RON CARSON
Staff Reporter

If you want to climb the ladder of success don't start by painting your ladder—at least that's the advice from one expert.

Those who paint their wooden ladders often end up with broken limbs or, if the ladder is high enough, they may never see their success.

For those of you who have never noticed wooden ladders are one of the few items that come in the raw on your local hardware store shelves.

"It's not a law," says Les Young, general manager of McFarlane Gendron Manufacturing Ltd., "but it is a regulation of the Canadian Standards Association." Mr. Young said the company has been making wooden ladders for a 100 years and not one has ever been painted.

Mr. Young also advised people against painting their ladders and there is a very sound reason behind his argument.

"If wooden ladders are painted it may mean they are underneath without the owner knowing of the fault until it is too late," he explained.

The Belleville manager also said that paint may cover flaws in the wood or defects. The ladders made in Belleville are constructed from Sitka spruce or hemlock.

McFarlane Gendron manufactures industrial ladders and sizes for other companies such as Bell Canada. Mr. Young said most of the industrial orders require a special type of preservative.

He recommended most people, who buy either step-ladders or extension ladders, should use a wood preservative on their ladder and a sealer and a stain, however. He said varnish is a common type.

Mr. Young also said that painted ladders could be potentially more slippery to climb and hold, more dangerous. The Canadian Standards Association will not allow any manufacturers to paint their ladders. The CSA is chartered by the federal government and many of its regulations are embodied in legislation.

With more ladder advice Mr. Young said that wooden ladders have one major advantage over aluminum ladders and that is the user can't be electrocuted while standing on them. Apparently, people have been electrocuted while using aluminum ladders.

For storage of your ladder, Mr. Young advises home owners to keep them in dry and ventilated areas.

Mall Growth May Cause Traffic Problem

A caution about cost-sharing between Quinte Mall developers and city hall was sounded Monday at city council's traffic committee.

City councillor Arthur Keegan indicated concerns that developers be charged too much for street changes from which other area businesses would also profit.

His caution came as the committee moved to approve a consultant's report on road changes needed to accommodate the anticipated increase in traffic resulting from the planned expansion in the northend shopping facility.

Among proposals are increasing the number of lanes on Bell Blvd. — the route serving most of the mall traffic flow — from one to two lanes for traffic turning north onto North Front St.

This would also mean changes in traffic signals.

Sharing of costs for the improvement has yet to be discussed, however, officials at Cambridge Leaseholds and city officials, the committee was told.

But, Ald. Keegan noted Cambridge already had paid for part of developing the intersection when the mall first opened for business several years ago.

Other businesses and developers in the area also benefited from the changes, he said.

"We have to talk out. We don't know what they (Cambridge) are going to share yet," said Mayor Robin Jeffrey.

"I want them to pay something, but I don't want them to be overcharged," said Ald. Keegan.

The planned expansion moved another step through the local government process at the committee accepted the report of consultants Damas and Smith.

The move was a sequel to approval last month of recommendations from city engineer Ald. Angelo based on the experts findings.

The document included widening Bell Blvd. parallel to the shopping centre extension — running west from the present mall — to four lanes, then tapering down to two. Estimated cost of all changes was $130,500.

But the committee has also agreed with Ald. Angelo that the four lanes be extended about another 600 feet to Lemoine St., the entire length of Cambridge holding.

This would also increase the cost, the city engineer said later.

The increased facilities — almost doubling present shopping space — was only part of a $15 million scheme which industrial park on the main western perimeter and 300 apartment units across the other side of Bell.

Earlier this year the committee was told the motel and industrial developments had hit unexpected land drainage problems. However, Frank Stokmans, Quinte Financial Board deputy director, said the board had never been officially notified, or any change in plans. Flooding is called for since the area — including the motel and apartment sites —now is classified industrial.

The traffic committee also approved a proposal from Mr. Stokmans altering the access pattern into the motel-industrial sites.

Developer's plans call for a 60-foot driveway to the proposed motel location.

But Mr. Stokmans's suggested access be widened to city street dimensions. The roadway could eventually be extended into neighbouring developments, arching back onto Bell Blvd. west of Lemoine St.

Healing Substance... Shrinks Piles, Checks Itch

Exclusive healing substance proven to shrink hemorrhoids... and repair damaged tissue.

A renowned research institute has found a unique healing substance with the ability to shrink hemorrhoids. It relieves itching and discomfort in minutes and speeds up healing of the injured, inflamed tissues.

One hemorrhoidal case history after another reported "very striking improvement." Pain was promptly and greatly relieved . . . actual reduction or retraction (shrinking) took place.

And most important—this improvement was maintained in cases where clinical observations were continued over a period of many months. Furthermore, these tests and observations were made on patients with a wide variety of hemorrhoidal conditions. All this was accomplished with a healing substance (Bio-Dyne) which quickly helps heal injured cells and stimulates growth of new tissue. Bio-Dyne is offered in ointment and suppository form called Preparation H.

In addition to actually shrinking hemorrhoids; Preparation H lubricates and makes elimination less painful. It helps prevent infection which is a stand cause of hemorrhoids.

Just ask your druggist for Preparation H Suppositories or Preparation H Ointment (with a special applicator).

Satisfaction or your money refunded.

When inspecting an older home for sale, you don't have to be an expert to discover symptoms of construction problems if you know what to look for. The basement is a good place to uncover such clues.

Water seepage can be costly. Look for signs of moisture. Search for dampness in corners and water stains along walls or cabinets.

Water pipes in houses built before WWII are likely to be made of iron or steel which tend to corrode over long years of use. Copper piping is usually found in newer houses. If you see a length of copper between segments of iron or steel, there have been plumbing problems.

Before you go upstairs, check the water heater's age, condition and capacity Nowadays, a water heater of less than 68 gallons capacity is not usual for a family of four or more. Check for rust or small leaks at the bottom of the tank.

Taylor Questions Loss Of Voting Right by British

By MARG HAYLOCK
Staff Reporter

PICTON — Amendments to the Immigration Act prohibiting British-born subjects the right to vote in Canadian federal elections have been termed "strange and illogical" by James Taylor, MPP Prince Edward—Lennox.

Mr. Taylor this week stated in a news release that on July 1, 1975, Canada's 108th birthday the traditional and automatic right of Canadian citizenship enjoyed for decades by British citizens born in Great Britain but raised in Canada was repealed.

"I find its most strange and illogical that the federal government has seen fit to remove by law a birthright and heritage of British-born Canadian citizens, many of whom fought in Two World Wars and worked all their lives to make Canada a better country for all of us to grow up and live in," he said.

Mr Taylor added that these British-born people are "for all practical purposes" full-fledged Canadian citizens.

"Their loyalty to Canada is beyond question. Instead of removing their birthright and forcing them to apply for Canadian citizenship the legislation should have given them automatic citizenship and prevented the appearance of "reverse discrimination "from arising," he commented.

"We in Canada are concerned with creating a climate of equal opportunity. Let's apply this principle to British-born subjects. To do less is to insult their heritage and our own firmly held convictions about freedom of speech, assembly and our parliamentary form of government," he observed.

Mr. Taylor said, "We will never permit this development to occur in Ontario.

The MP called on Ottawa to change this "discriminatory" policy and described it as another classic example of a need to re-order immigration priorities.

Riot Police in Parks Untrue Says Official

PICTON — An information officer with the Ontario ministry of natural resources said Monday it is an exaggeration to say that officers added to provincial parks staff have been trained in riot control

David Hellwell, a Toronto information officer with the ministry of natural resources said the term "riot trained" is an exaggeration. Mr. Hellwell's statement follows Friday's announcement by natural resources minister Leo Bernier that the special trained forces would staff the parks.

Mr. Hellwell told The Intelligencer Monday that the cost of a real riot squad, complete with helicopter would be extremely high.

He said Outlet Provincial Park in Prince Edward County was among the first to be staffed with two security officers "trained through the new program.

Mr. Hellwell said this park has received a high incidence of rowdyism. Since the patrols have started problems in the park have declined.

The park security officers have the same authority as Ontario Provincial Police constables. However, they have no jurisdiction outside the park.

A Tight Squeeze

Quinte Machine and Repair Co. employee Jack Baumhour crawls among the steel girders under the Dundas St. bridge Monday to check where work must be done. The company has been given a $1,200 job to patch steel girders badly corroded by weather and the effects of age. Now sandblasted, one steel member will be reinforced by a five-foot 5-16-inch thick, steel plate.

Police Warn Truckers To Obey Bridge Limit

TRENTON — Most local truck drivers are observing the six-ton load limit imposed on the Dundas St. bridge after a Toronto consultant recommended the limit be dropped earlier this year from 15 tons.

A Trenton police spokesman said Monday most local drivers now are aware of the restriction due to earlier publicity.

"Most are certainly using the new bridge," said the spokesman.

Trenton police and provincial transportation ministry officials have twice in the past week been checking the weight of trucks using the structure, described as badly corroded in places by engineers.

The spokesman said that as of Monday, no charges for contravention of the limit have been laid.

Some drivers have simply been warned not to use the bridge.

Police have been required by town bylaw to enforce the load limit. The spokesman said it is not being abused "extensively".

Portable weight scales supplied by the provincial government have so far been used twice to enforce the bylaw. No plans are set to bring the scales back to Trenton for additional checks of truck tonnage, but the possibility was not ruled out by the spokesman.

The six-ton load limit was established earlier this year and twinned with a pledge by Trenton mayor Bob Patrick that the town will spend $75,000 to repair the bridge.

Repairs Under Way

TRENTON — Two Quinte Machine and Repair Co. men began work Monday to reinforce a steel beam in the understructure of the Dundas St. bridge.

The work was okayed by council in late June and is expected to be complete by mid-week. Cost of the work is $1,200.

Due for repairs is a steel girder at the end of the fixed portion of the structure, now is badly corroded with at least one hole measuring the size of a softball.

Workers sandblasted the girder Monday in preparation for welding. Bolts in the beam will be cut out and replaced with larger-diameter bolts to add strength. A five-by-one-foot, 5-16th inch piece of steel will be welded over the weakened beam.

While the two men worked Monday, mid-morning traffic over the bridge was restricted to one lane.

A Weighty Task

Trenton constable Fred Nokes lifts one of four weight scales into the trunk of a provincial transportation ministry vehicle after Monday morning's work weighing trucks using the Dundas St. Bridge. Twice within the past week, scales have been set up near the bridge. Efforts are being made to restrict traffic to trucks under six tons, the recently established load limit.

Hospital Hires Purchaser

TRENTON — Trenton Memorial Hospital has announced the appointment of Andre Schabracq as its purchasing director. Mr. Schabracq, a former purchasing director with a chain of Ontario nursing homes and with Mount Sinai Hospital in Toronto, will assume his new post in mid-August.

Experts to Tour Centre

CAMPBELLFORD — A bus will leave here July 23 with members of the Northumberland Soil and Crop Improvement Association aboard for a day-long tour that will include the Elora research facility run by the University of Guelph. The facility in Elora about 15 miles north of Guelph, is the university's research centre for large farm animals and farm crops and soils.

Bus Seminar Endorsed

BLOOMFIELD — Two Prince Edward school trustees who recently attended the School Bus Operators' convention Monday endorsed the value of this seminar at a meeting of the board of education.

Sophiasburg trustee John Rankison observed the convention offered much food for thought in areas such as liability for accidents.

Trustee for Ameliasburg, George Cumingham, observed the convention was highly informative and recommended that, in future, as many members of the transportation committee as possible should attend.

"Not Another Accident!"

Auto insurance costs have been increasing because accidents have been increasing, and auto repairs and injury awards are trending higher. The Gerald Joyce Insurance Agencies Limited does offer a safe driver discount to the driver with a three-year record of no moving traffic violations.

Course Experiment Gaining Momentum

BLOOMFIELD — A county-oriented program of community education,The County as a Classroom, has enjoyed good response, says program co-ordinator Susan Greetham of the Prince Edward County Board of Education.

Mrs. Greetham established in the program through a ministry of education grant for the introduction of a community education program to Prince Edward County Schools.

"The program is getting along well," commented Mrs. Greetham.

In May, 150 surveys were distributed throughout the county to determine the interests and needs of county residents and from the 30 surveys returned, bi-weekly programs from mid-September until March 31 are presently being planned. To date, the programs are booked until Nov. 27, said Mrs. Greetham.

Each session will deal with a different subject and a few of the topics chosen by the county include adult physical education, police procedures, birds of the county, the supernatural, UFOs, a metric workshop and agriculture.

PLO Has Kindred Groups in the Third World Which Now Dominates U.N.

By JOHN D. HARBRON

Foreign Affairs Analyst

Thomson News Service

The question of whether Canada should permit representatives of the Palestinian Liberation Organization to attend a United Nations criminology conference in Toronto, is part of a larger UN identity problem.

It was emphasized last fall by the United Nations' decision to give the PLO representative status at the UN, even though they do not represent an accredited state.

They are not the only so-called "liberation movement" to have special representation at the UN. And all of them together are raising serious doubts and much cynicism among the older member nations about the UN's long-term purposes.

Technically speaking therefore, the PLO is entitled to take part in the UN Conference on Criminology whether it is held here or in any other country.

And though that outfit has engaged in some very brutal crimes of its own making and execution, the PLO has its own legal and constitutional minds. Arab lawyers who may some day work out a constitution for the Arab state of Palestine the PLO insist must come about.

Whatever Canada thinks of the United Nations effectiveness as one of the founding industrially-developed and racially-white nations, the UN is now made up largely of the many new countries of the Third World, more than 100 of them in fact, all with delegations and points of view.

Actually the Third World nations in the UN function in regional blocs, Arab, African and Latin American, with all these groups functioning as more or less as one on such issues as the expulsion of racist South Africa.

The vote to permit the PLO special status within the UN, also received large support from Third World nations-members because so many of them emerged the same way, with determined liberation movements winning their struggle for power.

Since the start of the world energy crisis, the regional blocs have concentrated on a single theme, a drive to revise the existing economic relationship between rich and poor countries.

Several Third World nations involved in this powerful cause, have emerged as major states in their own right, Brazil, Iran, Indonesia and Nigeria. Their potential for a different kind of UN leadership was not anticipated by the traditional great powers who formed the UN just 30 years ago.

A key United Nations' member in all this is the United States where public and congressional support for aid and assistance to the developing world has dwindled considerably.

The new American ambassador to the UN is urbanologist Daniel P. Moynihan, recently American ambassador to India, who came home to write and talk though against the Third World for its hard line on American policies.

Ambassador Moynihan, who saw the development world's problems on the largest single national stage, India, faces the chaos, corruption and backwardness of India, has not softened his remarks somewhat.

Nevertheless Mr. Moynihan who is not by nature a hard-liner, is giving Third World nations a message about the currently low level of patience in the U.S. with the political politics antics of Third World UN regional blocs. President Ford said much the same thing earlier.

This fall's major UN session on the new world order promises to be tasty and controversial, given all these internal United Nations development-in-progress within the dominant Third World, nation members are concerned.

Responsible Image Is Arabs' Goal

By GEORGE KITCHEN

UNITED NATIONS (CP) — The Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) is quietly trying to dampen the outcry that has arisen in Canada over the invitation to the PLO to send delegates to the United Nations crime prevention conference in Toronto in September.

The PLO has let it be known in diplomatic channels that it has no intention of using the conference as a forum in which to open a Middle East debate. Rather, it said, the PLO regards the Toronto meeting purely as a technical conference and not a proper place to make political points.

The PLO position is that there is no place for other forums in which it can, and will, raise the question of the rights of Palestinians in the Middle East.

The UN General Assembly granted the PLO official observer status last fall and a Canadian government decision to bar PLO delegates would force the UN to cancel the conference and shift it to another country. The General Assembly earlier gave the PLO the right to attend UN meetings and conferences and join in discussion and debate without the right to vote.

The PLO has advised the UN that it plans to send to Toronto a small delegation of four or five persons of high professional calibre.

There have been reports that one of the PLO delegates would be a Canadian. Since the Palestinians have no government and no homeland and lack a distinct nationality, the delegation likely will be made up of varying nationalities and the PLO may select as one of their representatives a Canadian of Arab origin who is versed in criminology or social work.

The gliding club in Australia's legendary Alice Springs holds many records, due in large part to experience amid the unusual thermal activity over the sparse outback. There is a story about one of the club's gliders coming in for an emergency landing in the desert when it was in collision with . . . yes, a kangaroo. The glider came off worst. Here, the club's top pilot, Bert Persson, inspects his new Libelle craft.

Merchants' Reaction

Belleville's downtown merchants appear to have over-reacted to the proposed bylaw that would regulate development of the city's core.

Their concern is to be expressed at city council's next meeting July 21.

The bylaw seeks to restrict downtown development in much the same fashion as residential growth is controlled. Developers would have to provide council with suitable plans containing adequate provision for, say, parking, before getting approval to proceed with their project.

The concept began with the city's Industrial Commission, and city Commissioner Fred Bemis can't understand all the commotion.

"We're looking at long-range development. Primarily these controls would be for all NEW redevelopment in the downtown core," notes Mr. Bemis. "We just want to make sure if someone comes to the city with a proposal to put up a $6 million building, someone can't build a tin can next door."

As a matter of personal opinion, Mr. Bemis couldn't see a single existing downtown merchant who would have anything over which to find concern in the proposed bylaw.

"Actually, the regulations would protect their investment," he says.

Perhaps the fault has been with the presentation of the proposal.

Whatever the problem, the city's downtown merchants will have to be sold on a plan that follows the original concern of the Industrial Commission — the revitalization of Belleville's core.

The onus is now on city council to demonstrate to the merchants that the proposed bylaw is in their own best interests.

Swimmer Was Beyond Aid of Those on Shore

Ottawa Journal

"Thirty persons stand and watch as man drowns," the headline read in describing circumstances surrounding the drowning recently of an Ottawa man who was swimming in the Ottawa River near the foot of Parkdale Avenue.

The first instinct is to be horrified at the callousness and selfishness, to deplore man's inhumanity to man. For some years there have been accounts of onlookers elsewhere being either too indifferent or too frightened to interfere in cases of persons being criminally attacked, or in other kinds of trouble. Was this a similar case?

Clearly it is not. Some 30 persons may indeed have watched as the victim drowned. But they walked in helplessness, not in indifference. So swift was the current that only a remarkably strong swimmer would have stood any chance of effecting a rescue. Even a trained lifeguard might not have succeeded. The police report that a boat would have been necessary to make any rescue attempt prudent.

These facts do not in any way minimize the tragedy. But they are reassurance that a group of ordinary persons did not act in some brutish way. The whole incident may also be a lesson to discount some of the other accounts of callousness to human need, and to avoid confusing ineffectiveness and confusion with callousness. Such callousness one would like to believe, is a completely unnatural reaction, still exceedingly rare.

News — The Silly Season

The "news" on the national and international scene these days is mighty dull. What does pass for news at that level has an artificial, manufactured flavor.

In Canada, the government is dickering whether to give the green light for admittance of Palestinian Liberation Organization representatives to a conference.

In the United States the networks are working themselves to death on the Senate investigation of the Central Intelligence Agency. Soon the United States may be able to claim for its passionate witch-hunting activities, from Watergate on, the most purified of national images. The Russians, as Toronto columnist Bruce West suggested recently, will be either nonplussed or laughing their heads off.

Cheques for about $20 million started going into the mail, 30 years ago today in 1945 — as the Canadian government made its first family allowance payments to mothers across the nation. The total registered had called for a payment of $252,500,000 annually to be spent towards the maintenance, care, training, education and advancement of children.

Workers, Lotus-eaters, Vacations

The Cobourg Star

It's great to get the short ties into the sand and enjoy a vacation. The best vacations of all are those — the best — absolutely nothing — just be one of the lazies. Well, we are. Most Canadians have only a couple of short weeks a year to enjoy this blissful lack of responsibility, and they cram every minute of it.

But as you are enjoying your holidays this season, don't feel ashamed if a selfish thought crosses your mind. Are you being played for a sucker? How many of those happy young people in the sand bedies you are living off the "pogey" you are paying for, and making no effort to find work?

A surprising number, we are afraid.

We are all in favor of helping those in need. But we have no sympathy for subsidizing somebody's summer amour.

Unemployment Insurance payments totalled $1 billion in the first four months of this year are $1.2 billion — up by 50 per cent from $800 million in the same period last year. Employees are now paying more sums of money into this so-called "insurance".

On a two-week pay period, employee contributions can run as high as $146.64 a year. This is matched by $305.30 from the employer, for a total of $451.94 a year, per employee. The rate of contribution is going to go up — there is talk of 50 per cent increase. This would bring the annual "take" up to $527 a year.

It is a fabulous grab now. It will become an even more fabulous grab.

Higher Property and Auto Insurance as Well as Fuel Costs Are in Store

By VINCENT EGAN

Business and Consumer Affairs Analyst

Thomson News Service

The brief period of single-digit inflation has ended with a bang.

For the next several months, the prospect is that inflation will run well ahead of this spring's annualized rate of seven to eight per cent.

The March-to-June increase of 1.5 per cent—or 18 per cent on an annual basis—is a taste of what's to come.

The increase in living costs for the 12 months ended in June was 10.4 per cent, with food costs adding most to the increase.

June figures from Statistics Canada reported an average increase of 18 per cent in beef prices and almost 20 per cent for all foods.

In Ontario alone, egg prices have jumped 23 per cent since the beginning of June, and an artificial shortage could send them still higher.

Prices are also climbing sharply on processed vegetables, dairy products, cereals and other bakery items.

Food accounts for almost one-quarter of the cost of living, as determined by federal statisticians. Heating is the biggest category at 31.4 per cent, and transportation third most important at 15.2 per cent of living costs.

Those two areas—housing and transportation—will probably give prices the biggest wallop in the months ahead.

The reason: Our government has changed its mind about holding down the price of oil and gas. Its new policy is that Canadian prices are to rise to world levels gradually.

But it didn't seem "gradual" when the federal government slapped on a super-tax of 10 cents per gallon of gasoline in late June, and decreed a 23 per cent jump in the price of crude oil on July 1.

At the same time, Ottawa has decided that the price of natural gas is to rise to its so-called commodity value. What that means to the household using natural gas is an increase of more than 50 per cent in the fuel bills next winter.

Such big price increases are quickly reflected in the prices of manufactured goods, since industry is vitally concerned with amounts of petroleum-based fuels.

But some of the biggest increases of all could be in those bills that you pay at intervals and that you may not associate with the cost of day-to-day living.

Property taxes, for example, are likely to rise in the order of 25 per cent during 1975, predicts economist Barbara Hoyle of Woodsworth Ltd., Toronto.

This year's bill for dwelling insurance will likely be 20 per cent higher than in 1974, and auto insurance premiums are higher, according to her predictions. (Unemployed people in industrialized countries, more as a result of last month's federal budget).

She expects housing to replace food as the main source of inflation for at least the next two years, average rents could go up 15 or 16 per cent both this year and next. Mortgage interest—representing nearly a tenth of the cost of housing—is about 11 per cent higher in 1975 than in 1974.

All indications are that, for the foreseeable future, inflation will be worse than it was in the United States—and quite possibly worse than, I think, other industrialized countries.

Banner Says It

Editor,
The Intelligencer:

I see another overhead sign has joined the motley cluster that decorates the downtown area.

Greeting a person entering Belleville from the west on Bridge Street is a large banner proclaiming "God Save the Queen".

I thought this antiquated nonsense went out of vogue in Canada years ago — it is certainly being relegated to the dust bin in the UK.

Something like "God Save Canada" might be more appropriate than the primordial cry of a dead empire.

ALAN C. HOCKLEY

Editor's note: The revolution is not here yet, or in the United Kingdom for that matter. "God Save The Queen" remains the national anthem of Britain, as well as a toast to Her Majesty, and is still sung on occasions in Canada of which she is head of state.

He's Fine!

Editor,
The Intelligencer:

I am writing to thank Mr. Hockley for all the time and energy he saves myself and a lot of other people in the city. Several times my husband and I see things in the paper that we say we are going to write the editor about but it seems we never get around to it, and then is a few days there's normally a letter from Mr. Hockley saying what we would say.

An example is $500 spent on a handful of people in some Lahr.

Moped Regulations Pleases Police Chief

By ROBIN CHASE

The Ontario legislature has approved legislation regarding the operation of motor-assisted bicycles (mopeds) and Belleville police officials, although welcoming the act, say the issue could have been easily resolved months ago.

The legislation amends the Highway Traffic Act, with special provisions for mopeds.

However, Chief Douglas Crosbie commented recently "if they've got a motor attached to them, they should have been classed as motor-cycles in the first place."

He was echoed by Deputy-Chief Harold Reid who remarked, "I think they were wrong in the first place not to put restrictions on them already. After all, they are a motorized vehicle."

The legislation originally omitted use of helmets but after listening to colleagues, John Rhodes, transportation and communications minister, offered an amendment making mandatory the wearing of helmets.

English Test Planned

BLOOMFIELD — Prince Edward Director of Education John McNeil (ob) trustees Monday he is preparing a test of basic English skills for Grade 8 students across the county in the 1975-76 school year.

Mr. McNeil said the examination tests spelling, use of words and, possibly, alertness to language. It is expected the test will be given in October.

If trustees agree, the test will also be administered at board level.

Ski Slope Becomes Summer Nature Trail

By TERRY SPRAGUE

Staff Reporter

PICTON — With the winter ski slopes bare of snow and skiers for another year at Macaulay Mountain Conservation area, east of here, visitors to the 425-acre site now are enjoying the scenic two-mile long nature trail. Tom Prout, resources manager for the Prince Edward Region Conservation Authority (PERCA) says that although the trail is two miles long, there are several loops in the trail which the hiker may take to shorten the distance.

"The trail is well-marked. As yet we have no signs describing any unique natural features along the trails route, but expect to in the near future," explained Mr. Prout.

The trail makes a complete circle at its entrance length and winds through a variety of habitat, from open fields and flat areas to heavily wooded sections, part of the trail climbing up a portion of the mountain-side. The trail is interspersed with a number of tiny bridges over creeks and cat-walks across marshy areas.

Macaulay Mountain Conservation Area is one of seven conservation areas in Prince Edward County managed by PERCA and is the only site which has been developed significantly.

Trenton weed inspector Robert Kirchmayer slashes weed manual and checks the number of letters sent to town landowners who have failed to keep weeds in check. Since the 28-year-old Loyalist College student began work in June, he has requested 26 property owners to clean up their land.

Arnold Calls Budget 'A Bad Joke'

Nancy Arnold, New Democratic Party candidate for Hastings-Peterborough, has called the recent provincial mini-budget a "bad joke."

Money marked for housing will not help young couples with down payments or any "reasonable portion" of mortgage interest payments.

"It will just go to certain developers who promise to speed up completion of houses already planned," said Mrs. Arnold

Vandalism Worries Education Board

Hastings County Board of Education officials would welcome the opportunity to get involved with a public education program designed to reduce vandalism.

Belleville Police Chief Douglas Crosbie appealed to education officials Monday for support in trying to reduce vandalism in the city. Chief Crosbie revealed that in the last 25 years acts of vandalism have increased from three a year to 700 this year.

Acting director of education L. F. Reid said Monday the Hastings County Board of Education would be glad to participate in any type of program which could help solve this problem.

Student Matches Wits with Weeds

By AL ZABAS

Staff Reporter

TRENTON — If you have one weed on your property, says Trenton weed inspector Robert Kirchmayer, you've got a problem.

It's not that he'll swoop down on you and slap your wrists, although that's his job and he probably would, it's just that one weed breeds other weeds.

Soon you could have a field or a front lawn overgrown with weeds. Then, Mr. Kirchmayer's interest in you would increase, and you just might be paying more than wanted work on your property — at about $9 an hour.

Four weeks on the job, the weed inspector has sent letters to 26 land owners in Trenton asking them to clean up their properties.

Costs for that service are $9 an hour, says Mr. Kirchmayer. "So if he has a big field it's going to run into some money."

Works department crews cut a property owner's weeds at a last resort, only if the owner doesn't do it himself. Letters requesting compliance with a town weed control bylaw are sent by the inspector first.

It's an unusual job for a first-year civil engineering technician student at Loyalist College. It's also one that is new to him.

A Canadian navy cook for over seven years, he said Friday "I didn't know about noxious weeds before, but I had a feeling you weren't supposed to have them around in the middle of town."

He hasn't found many downtown. It's near the outskirts of Trenton, one runs across weed beds.

BCI Has 13 Scholars

Belleville Collegiate Institute (BCI) can boast 13 Ontario scholars this year with Corinna Wong taking the top honors with 91.2 per cent.

BCI principal J.A. Walker announced Wednesday that Grade 13 students Douglas Ridley, Richard Hounslow, Karen Hamelink, Debbie Hasold, Anne Aikel, Wayne Murray, Barbara Graham, Ian Kellogg, Steve Kirby, Roberta Driscoll and Tiina Heyduck also finished with 80 plus averages.

Construction sites also present problems. It's untended land, he says, and construction companies couldn't care less if there's weeds on them.

"You have to keep your eyes open. People try to get away with things."

Not only are weeds unpleasant — in those suffering from allergies — but they have a tendency to spread from one property to another: "A lot of people complain about their people's property. The seeds blow onto theirs."

They can also present a fire hazard. Dried by a lack of rain, a burning cigarette butt can set a field afire, he says.

When he first started to work for the town's building inspection department, Mr. Kirchmayer said he acted on complaints from citizens. Now, he says, and construction companies couldn't care less if there's weeds on them.

Today's Child

by Helen Allen

RON AND KEN

Boys this age would never be caught expressing affection for each other. But it's obvious there is brotherly love between Ken (left), just turned 13, and Ron, 10 — and they are good friends as well.

These boys enjoy each other's company. They like hiking and camping together. They share jokes and good-natured teasing. So, since being together is important to both, a home is sought where the two brothers will be welcomed into the family.

Ken and Ron are Ojibway Indians, a healthy, handsome pair with black hair and very dark eyes.

Ken is quiet and pleasant. He gets along well with people of all ages but is somewhat unsure of himself and inclined to be a follower rather than a leader. Ken seldom says or does anything to call attention to himself but he welcomes friendly overtures. Considered a slow learner, Ken has been promoted to Grade 7 more because of his age than because of academic standing. Though not scholastically inclined, he is a co-operative student and has always been a favorite with his teachers. Ken loves the outdoors and is interested in sports. He plays hockey and belongs to a judo club.

Ron is happy and lively, more outgoing than his brother and also more likely to get into mischief. Though average in intelligence, he has had difficulties in school because he finds it hard to concentrate. He did not do very well in Grade 5 last term and will have to repeat that grade. Ron can be restless and demanding — symptoms of his need for attention and acceptance. He very much wants to be adopted, to have a family and to belong. When they are achieved he will feel more settled and at peace with the world — and his schoolwork will undoubtedly improve.

Ron has a sense of humor and can be quite witty when he feels at ease. Ron loves the outdoors and is keen on all games.

The brothers' adopting parents should enjoy their personalities, be proud of their heritage and not pressure them for academic achievement.

To inquire about adopting Ken and Ron, please write to Today's Child, Ministry of Community and Social Services, Box 808, Station K, Toronto M4P 2H2. In your letter please tell something of your present family and your way of life.

Special attention is necessary for pup in summer

In Summer

Pets Need Special Care

The hot weather that makes humans uncomfortable can be even more miserable for animal pets. Long-haired dogs and cats are especially affected by high temperatures and may need extra attention.

All pets should have plenty of drinking water available since they perspire and thirst more in hot weather. Keep water dishes full of clean water at all times.

Never leave a pet in an enclosed space without proper ventilation. Locking a dog in a car while you go grocery shopping in July is heartless, and can be dangerous to the animal's health.

If your dog pants abnormally, acts dizzy or faint, and has been exposed to excessive heat, move him to a cooler place as quickly as possible (cold water will help cool him) and call your veterinarian. Prolonged high temperatures with heat shock could lead to serious damage.

Tiny bugs called ectoparasites attack our canine pets during summer months more than other times. These little parasites, working their way through the animal's coat, cause an itching sensation that is terribly irritating. Some types bite, and that is why you may see your dog suddenly biting his skin frantically. Your veterinarian can advise you about the best type of parasite-control preparation to use.

Some dogs suffer a skin condition called "hot spots" during hot weather. If left untreated, this irritation can cause the hair to fall out, and will leave a large red patch of bare skin. At this point, the infection can spread to other parts of the body, and becomes a serious matter.

This need not happen if you keep your pet's coat particularly clean during this season, checking frequently for any sign of skin eruption. If you do see a "hot spot", call your veterinarian.

If you are travelling with your pets, make sure their rabies and distemper vaccinations are up to date — that's a must — and make sure that their licence and name tags are secure on their collars, in case of loss.

Your dog's eyes can be damaged or inflamed by grit and the wind if he rides with his whole head outside the car. Close the windows just far enough so that he can get his nose to the fresh air without getting his head through.

One further piece of advice to pet-owners who are also parents of small children — don't permit the cuddly mauling that can give a cat or dog the sensation of being smothered. Who'd blame a fluffy persian or shaggy sheepdog for biting or scratching after being hugged in July. Wouldn't you?

Sisters Score a First

Carol and Elisabeth

Two Belleville sisters scored a first recently the Department of National Defence announced.

Carol Michel, 14, and Elisabeth Michel, 13, are among the first girls to attend Ipperwash Cadet Camp at Ipperwash, Ontario.

The girls live at RR 5, Belleville.

More than 1,200 boys and girls from across Ontario plus exchange cadets from Quebec and the United Kingdom will attend two or six week courses during the summer long camp.

Stirling Woman Wins Scholarship

Gayle Hoover

Gayle Hoover, Stirling, was recently awarded the $2,000 Mary A. Clarke Memorial Scholarship awarded by the Canadian Home Economics Association.

Margaret Pope, president of the association, announced the scholarship award at its recent annual meeting in Montreal.

Miss Hoover is a 1975 graduate of the University of Guelph. She received a Bachelor of Applied Science degree in human nutrition with special honors.

A former student of Centennial Secondary School, Miss Hover, who was born in Belleville, will attend Harvard University this fall where she will pursue post-graduate study in nutritional education.

"I would like to spend a period of time overseas in a Third World country, teaching and helping to improve the nutritional status of the people," Miss Hoover said.

Men Only

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — For Kiwanis International, it's still "men only." Delegates to the international businessmen's service club rejected a proposal to change the laws and allow women to become members. They also rejected proposals to re-admit two clubs whose charters were revoked because they had admitted women.

Women's Task Force Head: Psychoanalyst to the City

TORONTO (CP) — Being co-ordinator of the Mayor's Task Force on the Status of Women in Toronto is like "being a psychoanalyst to every woman in the city," says Judith Adam, who has held the post since it was created 16 months ago.

The co-ordinator is charged with the task of deciding what action should be taken to ensure that women in all levels of society in the City have equal opportunities with men.

Miss Adam and a volunteer executive committee of six women have produced a report comparing salaries of men and women in the civic service. It follows four other reports which dealt with abortion counselling services, day-care needs, venereal disease and the fact that public health nurses are paid less than men in other departments, with fewer qualifications.

But her activities as co-ordinator don't stop at preparing reports.

She also acts as an unofficial emcee for various women's groups, advising women who telephone her office with specific problems and acting as a support for female employees at city hall.

from some department will march into my office at 4:30 and tell me how furious they are," the native of New York said.

In one case, a department head had forbidden women to wear trousers; in another, a woman had been forbidden to wear her native dress; in several others, women had been dismissed for what seemed to be discriminatory reasons. They subsequently were rehired.

Asked whether she could gauge reaction to her activity, she replied: "Oh yes. I can say it has been generally greeted with resentment.

"The union resents it, the city resents it, everybody resents it. Everybody has told me to mind my own business."

Everybody, she adds, except Mayor David Crombie.

"He has been supremely supportive," she said.

Return to Fashion

For centuries, lace and embroidery have been in and out of fashion. This year with interest turning again to the peasant, earthy look, they are back. This 1870 lace border, of machine-made Tulle, is part of the extensive collection of laces and embroideries from the 16th century to present at the Jacoby Museum in St. Gallen, Switzerland.

Lace and Embroidery Back in Style Again

ST. GALLEN, Switzerland (CP) — For centuries lace and embroidery has been in and out of fashion. This year with interest turning again to the peasant, earthy look, they are back.

One of the largest centres of the world's embroidery trade and a top exporter is in St. Gallen.

It is said the Crusaders brought delicately strengthed silk whose owed their origin to fishing nets back from the Far East.

The lace became popular in Italy, Spain, France and the northern countries. But it was hand-sewn and expensive and was worn only by the nobility.

A century later embroidery appeared when dots and flowers in cotton were woven into linens. These were used mainly for church choir shirts. But with the introduction of hand-operated machines in the 19th century, embroidery became a common accent on all types of clothing.

Embroidery was introduced into St. Gallen and the neighboring canton of Appenzell in two versions. In one, a beautiful Turkish girl is said to have been brought in 1751 to Appenzell to instruct the village women in the art of embroidery.

And yet another version claims that a daughter of a St. Gallen citizen brought the art home from a convent she attended in Germany.

In any event, the embroidery industry took a firm hold in the region. By 1775, Appenzell had some 40,000 embroiderers working in their homes.

But it was the St. Gallen businessmen who sold it to the world. Most of it was sold helleur embroidery on white or multi-colored muslin and was used for shawls, scarves, bonnets, aprons and even curtains.

Before too long, an enterprising St. Gallen businessman installed in 1829 the first machine for making embroidery.

Since St. Gallen has been the centre of the Swiss textile industry from the Middle Ages it is fitting that the city should have a lace and embroidery museum.

Original pieces of 18th-century lace in needlepoint and bobbin are on display. They feature simple motifs such as stars. One display case contains laces from the 17th century when embroidered neckties, cuts and large collars were the vogue, especially with men.

These original laces and embroideries collected in the museum are from every country as well as Switzerland. There is needlepoint from Louis XIV's time with designs of chandeliers and human figures which are ceremonial and elegant.

The museum also possesses a magnificent gown made for the Empress Eugenie in Napoleon III's efforts to revive the French lace industry. It is made entirely in French needlepoint lace.

Although lace and embroidery has been in and out of fashion, there has always been a steady demand—to keep the Swiss factories in operation.

Today embroideries are still produced in large and small factories scattered about the St. Gallen and Appenzell districts. The machines now are controlled by punched tape.

Yet there are a few homes where the old art of hand-made lace and embroidery carries on.

Swiss embroideries are a big export item. The basic cotton of the turn of the century has been joined by silk, rayon, vinyl and imitation leather.

A number of exporters even create two haute-couture shows a year to highlight the St. Gallen product and present the collections in London, Paris, Rome and New York.

Ann Landers

Couple Wants a Mother — For His Unborn Child

Dear Ann Landers: I am a woman 33 years of age. My husband is 36. We both love children very much. I had a hysterectomy last year which means I will never be able to bear a child. My husband is in perfect health, very handsome and would make a wonderful father.

We are not wealthy, but we do have some stocks, bonds and a nice savings account. My husband and I would pay a woman $10,000 to have his child, provided she promised to keep it a secret and relinquish all rights. Together, we would select the candidate. She would stay in our home as a "guest" until she became pregnant. The woman would then be provided for in a nearby city where she could work, if she chose, but all her living expenses would be paid by us.

When she gave birth, we would pay all bills, take the child from the hospital and buy the woman a ticket to any city in the continental United States with the understanding that she would never return.

Are we crazy to want a child who has the genes of at least one of us? Could it work? Should we run a blind ad in the newspaper? Would you be willing to serve as the intermediary?—Hoping

Dear H.: I would not presume to comment on whether or not you are crazy, but the normal adoption procedure is the course rational people would take. I suppose your wild idea COULD work; in fact, I'm sure it has . . . somewhere . . . at some time. Nothing is so bizarre but that someone has done it.

Don't run any ads. You will be besieged by hundreds of weirdos, oddballs, dingbats and wingy dames.

As for me serving as an "intermediary"—thanks a lot, but no thanks.

Dear Ann Landers: What advice can you give a gal, 28, single, not beautiful, but witty? (Please forgive the bragging.)

To make up for my lack of beauty I find myself trying too hard to be the life of the party. I often feel that I'm pressing to please others. The next day I'm unhappy with myself. Is there any cure for this?—Zelda

Dear Z.: A problem recognized is half solved.

Here's a quote from Pete Hamill, a splendid journalist who says it better than I could:

"I realized early that one central reason for my change was that I didn't want to be an anymore.

"I had spent too many nights entertaining other people—doing numbers on myself that kept only to sweet, bitter afternoons of remorse. I wanted to live a life—not a performance."

Beautifully said, Pete.

Dear Ann Landers: Why would a man who is "over the hill" (and I mean completely impotent) talk about nothing but sex whenever we are out in company? He doesn't know our clean jokes. Only dirty ones. Of course I am describing my husband.

Sometimes I get so ashamed I'd like to drop through the floor.

P. S. He doesn't drink. What's the matter with him?—Tamale Face

Dear Face: Talk can be a substitute for performance—and hopefully for the talker, a smokescreen. Sometimes an extremely patient and understanding wife can reverse the situation. I also recommend counselling.

CYCLOPEDIA OF HOUSEMAKING IDEAS
By Barbara Taylor Bradford

Mrs. Bradford has not only written extensively on the subject but has executed numerous design commissions including the Tunisian Embassy in London. She is now the editor of a decorating magazine in New York.

Her book is encyclopedic in scope, although instead of being alphabetically arranged, it is set up to cover each subject in a logical sequence.

It begins with The Master Plan, and covers all aspects of home decoration, including budgeting, colour schemes, do-it-yourself projects, outdoor living through to Part Seven which covers housekeeping and household information. Illustrated in color and black and white, it is available in the Corby Public Library.

Suntan Lotions Won't Speed Up Tan

OTTAWA (CP) — The best way to choose a suntan lotion is to read the label.

That advice in a new federal health department pamphlet is as easy as it sounds if the shopper notes one factor that all suntan preparations have in common.

"None of them will allow you to tan faster, darker, or more evenly than you normally would," the department says.

"Tanning is actually your skin's way of protecting you from a sunburn." And rates of tanning and safe-exposure limits depend on skin type.

People with dark complexions tan fast and do not usually burn while fair-skinned people tan slowly and may burn first. Red-heads burn easily and produce an uneven tan—freckles. Very light-skinned people never tan at all.

Cells in the skin, called brown pigment called melanin, which absorbs sun rays and prevents burning.

Suntan lotions and creams either absorb or reflect sun rays. Moisturizers offer only a little protection against sunburn by increasing the skin's ability to withstand irritation.

"Physical sunscreens and highly concentrated chemical sunscreens are capable of absorbing or reflecting most of the harmful rays, even during peak hours of sunlight activity," the health department says.

The "tan" caused by artificial tanning agents is the result of a chemical reaction that mimics the action of melanin and causes the skin to turn brown.

"Most contain chemical sunscreens do as well, as the sunscreen can look tanned while actually getting a tan.

"There should be clues on the label or in the advertising copy that do not ask your copy to help you decide how much protection the product will give you.

"A product which claims to promote rapid tanning probably has little or no sunscreen, while one advertising maximum protection against sunburn most likely has quite a high sunscreen concentration.

"If you can't decide which pharmacist for help."

Never intentionally, get a burn, thinking it will turn into a tan, the pamphlet says. "It won't."

"As the burn fades, the tan you acquired while burning may show through, making it appear as though the tan was a direct result of the burn."

Sun should be taken in small doses, about 15 to 30 minutes on each side the first day, increasing exposure each day by half the previous day's exposure time.

"Even when the sun's rays are dispersed, by fog or haze, you can still get a very bad burn if you are exposed too long."

Once you have a sunburn, sunscreens will not help. They might even be hazardous, the health experts say.

"Sunburn pain can be temporarily alleviated by applying a cooling wet dressing—such as three-per-cent sodium bicarbonate or vinegar—followed by a soothing lotion."

Chronic exposure to sunlight over many years can lead to premature aging of the skin or to skin cancer in fair-skinned people.

TOWNSHIP OF THURLOW — AUDITOR'S REPORT
FINANCIAL STATEMENTS FOR 1974

The Reeve
Members of Council Inhabitants and Ratepayers of the Corporation of the Township of Thurlow

We have examined the 1974 financial statements of the Corporation of the Township of Thurlow, and its local boards, which are listed on the attached index. Our examination included a general review of the accounting procedures, such tests of accounting records and other supporting evidence as we considered necessary in the circumstances.

In our opinion, these financial statements present fairly the financial position of the Corporation of the Township of Thurlow as at December 31, 1974, and the results of its operations for the year then ended, in accordance with accounting principles, generally accepted for Ontario Municipalities applied on a basis consistent with that of the preceding year.

CP News Roundup

Oil Price Prober Is Chosen

TORONTO (CP) — Claude M. Lalonde, a Canadian who has been serving as executive director of the World Bank Group in Washington, D.C., was named Monday as Ontario's Royal commissioner investigating oil and gas prices.

Energy Minister Dennis Timbrell told the legislature that Mr. Lalonde, 61, would take up his new appointment Aug. 1.

Rebate May Hurt

OTTAWA (CP) — Ontario's new sales tax rebates to purchasers of 1975 North American-built cars might have perverse effects on the Canadian automobile industry and Canada's trade position, Trade Minister Alastair Gillespie said Monday.

Mr. Gillespie said the rebate program, introduced July 7, might be a violation of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

Booze, Drugs Fed Pigs

OTTAWA (CP) — For two years, 18 pigs have guzzled alcohol and become heroin addicts—all in the name of science.

They were the "guinea pigs" in an experiment by two Carleton University psychologists trying to discover why so many heroin addicts turn to alcohol when they are weaned off the drug by methadone, a heroin substitute.

MPs Seek Jobs

OTTAWA (CP) — Opposition MPs pressed the government Monday to find alternate employment for thousands of rail employees and Nova Scotia steel workers who have been laid off this summer.

Stanley Knowles (NDP—Winnipeg North Centre) asked in the Commons what the government has done to persuade the national railways "to keep their employees at work, especially in view of the great need for improvement in the rolling stock of both railways."

Flush Daily Says MP

TORONTO (CP) — Home water systems should be flushed each morning to guard against poisoning from heavy metals which accumulate in drinking water overnight, Bernie Newman (L — Windsor Walkerville) told the legislature Monday. He asked Environment Minister William Newman to investigate the problem. High blood pressure and mental retardation can result from excessive absorption of heavy metals such as cadmium, present in water pipes and solder, he said.

Picks up Winnings

TORONTO (CP) — The second winner of the $100,000 grand prize in last week's Wintario draw said he would really like a car with a chauffeur but that he also plans to invest the money.

James Bedford Allen, 69, of Toronto picked up his winnings Monday. He was helped by a friend to the lottery office from a nursing home where he is currently staying.

Nixon Comments

TORONTO (CP) — Ontario Hydro should cut its rate increase request by half and rent out office space in its new headquarters in order to cut budget corners, Liberal Leader Robert Nixon told the legislature Monday.

Hydro originally proposed a rate increase of 22.6 per cent to come into effect next January—an increase Treasurer Darcy McKeough has called "appalling."

Appeals Possible

TORONTO (CP) — Lay people in Ontario now will have more say in governing medicine, dentistry, nursing, optometry and pharmacy as a result of the proclamation Monday of the Health Disciplines Act.

Regulations also spell out conflict of interest for health professionals.

The act gives power to a seven-member board of lay people to hear appeals from anyone dissatisfied with the way their complaints have been handled by the governing college of any of the five professions.

Can Close Schools

TORONTO (CP) — A board of education will be allowed to close schools or lock out teachers during a strike by teachers only after holding a public meeting to explain its position, a committee of the Ontario legislature decided Monday.

A motion to amend proposed legislation governing collective bargaining between boards of education and teachers to include this provision was carried by a 7-to-4 vote.

Brainpower Purchased

OTTAWA (CP) — Companies here spent about three times as much abroad as foreign firms spent in Canada for a variety of business services from royalties to research, Statistics Canada said in results of a special study on transactions in 1972.

The study of 4,000 businesses gives a rough idea of how much domestic companies rely on foreign brainpower and experience, but there may be many charges for which statisticians cannot account.

Consider Burglaries

WASHINGTON (AP) — The justice department is weighing the legality of burglaries conducted by the FBI to gain information considered necessary for national security.

Department spokesman Robert Havel said Monday officials will review the circumstances of the break-ins. But he said any criminal charges might be barred by the statute of limitations, which prevents federal prosecutions for most offences after five years.

Havel said it is Attorney-General Edward Levi's policy and the department's policy that burglary is a legal tactic to gather foreign intelligence in limited cases.

Remedy Weaknesses

MONTREAL (CP) — Some of the weaknesses uncovered in Air Canada's financial control procedures by a special investigation are now being remedied, an inquiry into the airline's financial operations was told Monday.

Charge Denied

MONTREAL (CP) — The assertion that abortion referral agencies are being used to channel newborn Canadian babies to couples in the United States is entirely false, various agencies involved said Monday.

Arab Promises Action If Canada Bars PLO

OTTAWA (CP) — The head of a delegation of Canadian Arabs warned Monday his group will do all in its power to keep Arab delegations away from the September United Nations conference in Toronto if the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) is banned from attending.

George Hajjar also said the Canadian Arab Federation, which he says represents 18,000 Canadian Arabs, will attempt to disrupt Canadian-Arab business in such an eventuality.

Mr. Hajjar and three others spoke to reporters after a meeting with External Affairs Minister Allan MacEachen urging that the PLO be permitted to attend the Toronto conference on crime.

Mr. Hajjar said he got no commitment from the minister whose government is considering whether to heed demands from Ontario government and Jewish groups and ban the organization which its opponents call terrorist.

Mr. Hajjar described himself as an assistant to Khaled Mouammar, president of the federation who was unable to attend the meeting with Mr. MacEachen.

Before the meeting Mr. Hajjar had said in an interview that if he did not get a hearing from the minister he would shout his demands from the Commons public galleries.

Love All, Avoid Issues Get Cheques, PCs Are Told

TORONTO (CP) — Love everyone, avoid the issues and get the money is the advice being given to Progressive Conservative fund-raisers, Jim Pocklis (NDP—Port Arthur) told the legislature Monday.

"Never voice your own opinions on issues, obey the fundamentals of grassroots fund-raising, love everybody, avoid the issues and get the cheques," he said, quoting from a party manual.

GREAT NEWS FROM GENERAL MOTORS FOR SMALL CAR BUYERS

60,000-MILE ENGINE GUARANTEE

Until now, in the 1975 model year, the toughest engine guarantee you could get on imported or North American cars covered either three years or 50,000 miles, or one year with unlimited mileage. Well, General Motors has just gone all the rest of them one tougher, with a 60,000 mile or five year engine guarantee (whichever comes first) on new 1975 Chevrolet Vegas, and Chevrolet Monzas equipped with a 140 cubic inch 4-cylinder engine delivered on or after June 25, 1975.

General Motors guarantees to the owners of 1975 vehicles equipped with a 140 cubic inch 4-cylinder engine that any authorized General Motors dealer will make repairs, without charge to the owner, during the term of the guarantee, to the cylinder block, cylinder head, all internal engine parts, the intake and exhaust manifolds and water-pump made necessary because of defects in material or workmanship.

This guarantee is in addition to the New Vehicle Warranty but does not apply to repairs required because of misuse, negligence, accident or lack of reasonable or proper maintenance.

This guarantee is available to earlier purchasers of 1975 Chevrolet Vegas and 4-cylinder Chevrolet Monzas at extra cost through any General Motors dealer before October 1, 1975.

A 60,000 mile engine guarantee! Don't make any deals until you see Trudeau's.

MONZA

Now one of the most popular new cars of 1975 is an even better buy. The spirited sporty Monza drive, versus economy . . . and a new 5 year or 60,000 mile guarantee on all 1975 4-cylinder models. No other car manufacturer makes this offer. Test drive Monza today . . .

11 IN STOCK

37 MPG HIGHWAY 24 MPG CITY

The Chevrolet Monza 2 + 2 Hatchback Coupe comparably equipped to models sold in Canada with the standard 140 cubic inch 4-cylinder engine, 2 barrel carburetor and 3 speed manual transmission, achieved 37 miles per Imperial gallon in the U.S. Government EPA Highway Tests and 24 miles per Imperial gallon in the City Tests.

VEGA

12 IN STOCK

The tough little car from Chevrolet now carries a tougher warranty. 5 years or 60,000 miles . . . that's a guarantee from General Motors no matter what happens. Looking for small car convenience . . . test drive the 1975 Vega. It's priced about the same as the others . . . but built a little better.

40 MPG HIGHWAY 25 MPG CITY

The Chevy Vega equipped comparably to the models sold in Canada with 3-speed manual transmission achieved 40 miles per Imperial gallon in the U.S. Government EPA Highway Tests and 25 miles per Imperial gallon in the City Tests.

● You may not match EPA results in actual driving. How close you come will depend on a number of factors. Fuel economy is affected by many factors, such as how you drive, the load you carry, optional equipment, weather conditions and where you do your driving.

Year After Death Hazardous Railway Crossing Still in Use

By JERRY BROWN
Staff Reporter

Almost a year after Oscar King was killed by a train on one of the private railway crossings in the Tyrling Tract have replaced the dangerous situation has not been changed ed.

Thurlow Township, the ministry of transportation and communications; CNR and his neighbors have not agreed on a way to solve the problem.

After two years of negotiations with the ministry and CNR about plans and financing of a new road, council's decision was reached by an assemblage of property-owners, Monday night.

Mr. King's widow and son-in-law walked out of the meeting when it became evident the group was going to reject council's proposal calling for a new road servicing the farmland.

After rejecting the proposal council was instructed by the property-owners to approach the CNR and the ministry about building a new 40-foot road just south of the tracks using part of the railroad's right-of-way, between Mitchell's Road and Elmwood Drive.

A plan for a new road, about a quarter-mile, lies between Mitchell's Road and Elmwood Dr. — south of the CNR Tracks would have split the existing properties into two large pieces but was modified by the group.

Originally council's plan was to build the new road 500 feet south of the CNR right of way. This would not force any of the homes to be moved or destroyed, allowing room for existing structures.

The original petition to correct the hazardous situation was presented to the Thurlow Township Council May, 1973 by Mr. King and six of the 13 landowners and asked for the abolition of the crossings.

A replacement road allowing access to the farm land from the south side of the tracks would be built on land donated to the townships by the property owners.

The petition also expressed concern about the crossing delays of up to one hour caused by trains waiting to enter the Belleville Yards.

Mr. King appealed to the ministry of health and Jack Ellis, MP for aid in speeding up the bureaucratic tangle

"Now unless some thing is done soon, there will be more deaths due to unnecessary delays and paper work by superior sources who keep pawning it off onto someone else," he said in prophetic letter to the Ministry of Health in November, 1973, months before he died.

Potter Remains Silent On Political Future

By HARRY MULHALL
Staff Reporter

With expectancy still mounting ove ra full provincial election both Progressive Conservative and Liberal parties in Quinte riding have yet to call nominating conventions.

Events at Queen's Park are being closely watched by local political organizers in the riding and indications are that the timing of conventions will depend on when Premier William Davis will call an election.

The Belleville—Trenton area constituency is the seat of Correctional Services Minister Richard Potter.

He has represented the riding since he first entered provincial politics in 1967.

Dr. Potter has yet to officially confirm his intentions and there has been speculation on the nomination to date.

But Gerry Brennan, president of the riding's Conservative party association and the organization had an statement until Dr. Potter makes his announcement.

"We're going on the premise that Dr. Potter is running, that Dr. Potter will be a candidate," he said. "As far as I'm concerned I'm going to call a convention after Mr. Davis issues the election writ."

Mr. Brennan said the riding executive had decided that a convention would be the kick-off to the party's campaign in Quinte.

One personality on whom speculation has centred has been Mayor Robin Jeffrey.

But the mayor said Monday she was not ready to "make any statement whatsoever."

"If Dr. Potter runs again I will support Dick Potter," she added.

If the office of mayor became vacant city council has a choice of appointing one of its members or calling an election — providing the vacancy does not occur after March 31 in a local election year. After that, the office is filled by appointment. Next local election is December 1976).

Charles Bales Melrose farmer and a Liberal party director for eastern Ontario ridings, said organizers were still conferring about a convention date for Quinte.

He said plans are "definitely underway" and candidates have been asked about dates of announcing their intentions.

The only party with a candidate in the field is the New Democratic Party.

He is Carson McLaughlan, 30-year-old Belleville railroad office worker. Mr. McLaughlan has been campaigning in Quinte since his nomination March 13.

Pie-throwing Incident Ends Band Engagement

An American rock music group was treated to some slap-stick comedy at a dancing lounge here early today but it did not strike a humorous vein on the part of band members.

A city police spokesman said today the group, Harem Scarem, of New York City was midway through its set at about 12:10 a.m. in the Mad Mechanic Lounge at the Four Seasons Motor Hotel when four men clad in khaki overalls and heads covered by ski-type balaclavas walked in and let them have it with fruit pies covered with whipped cream.

The spokesman said the men, described as tall and in their early 20s, had been admitted by an unknown patron and fled after throwing the pies.

Chris Davies, Four Seasons manager, confirmed the group of three women and two men had decided to cut short their engagement due to the incident.

Officials Delay Action on Sidewalk

City council's traffic committee Monday decided to collect more data before it makes any new move on a controversial sidewalk project involving northend city school children.

Water Deal Nears

Belleville city council at its next meeting will be asked to approve a water and sewer agreement with Sidney Township — an agreement which so far has been the major stumbling block of a 71-home subdivision.

The subdivision proposed by Belleville builder Reg Breault has been stalled for several months as professional staff from both municipalities wrestled with the wording of the agreement.

Before Ontario's ministry of housing will approve the development Sidney city's east end in the vicinity of Harder Drive, the project first must be serviced with both water and sewer lines.

The agreement came under fire from Mr. Breault several weeks ago when the document contained the stipulation that the development meet city of Belleville standards.

"If the development is in the township, then it should meet township standards — not that these would be any more relaxed than the city standards" said Mr. Breault.

Township council concurred with Mr. Breault ...monday night and altered the wording to include "sound engineering principals."

A resolution to accept the agreement passed council and will be delivered immediately to Belleville City Hall for inclusion on council's agenda July 21.

Turner Remanded

Donald Turner of Prospect Hill in Trenton, charged with assault causing bodily harm in connection with a brawl following a licensed dance here June 2, has been remanded to Aug. 14 for trial in provincial court.

A city police spokesman said today Turner appeared in court Monday after a three-week waiting period during which he applied for legal aid.

The charge resulted from a donnybrook at the completion of a minor league baseball game at Dick Ellis Rink during which Bernard Ostrom, 18 of Pine St., in Belleville, had his nose broken in three places.

The exhibition Frankford-Belleville juvenile match was called midway through the third period by the referees due to roughness. The league has suspended Frankford from further play in Belleville

Jumping Wheels

Steve Miller, 12, of Yeomans Street, was among group of young bicyclists who found inspiration for pastime in exploits of Evel Knievel, American daredevil ace. They erected ramps on Quinte Exhibition Grounds outside Ben Bleecker Auditorium to take briefly to the air on wheels.

Turn Off the Lights Resident Asks PUC

Have you heard the one about the timeworn, ... who lamented his street was too well lit?

A Highland Ave. resident recently sent a letter to the Belleville Public Utilities Commission saying his area was basically residential and he can not understand why it was necessary to turn his quiet street into a Broadway.

It seems during routine maintenance of the area, PUC crews had cleaned the lens covers, replaced the old lamps with new ones increasing the light output.

The combination of these factors along with the fact that Highland Avenue used to be Highway No. 2 until it was rerouted and had lighting for a major artery was the cause of the problem.

Mr. Britton thanked the observant man for his note and said the matter would be rectified as soon as city council saw the light.

Dog Slain

City police are investigating the knife-slaying of a dog sometime late Sunday or early Monday at 22 Great St. James St., while a next-door house at 28½ Great St. James St. had broken into.

A police spokesman said today the dog, owned by Peter Sevsky, had its throat cut. He added police were not informed as to the kind of canine.

Waterfront Study Presented

Members of Sidney Township council Monday got their first look at the alternatives presented in a waterfront study prepared on behalf of the Moira River Conservation Authority by Toronto consulting firm Crysler and Lathem.

The study gained the informal approval of council with its major recommendation being provision of a community centre for the township in the area of the bay front.

Community Centre for Sidney On Suggestion of Harbor Study

By COLIN BRUCE
Staff Reporter

The recommendations of Toronto environmental consultants covering recreational use of the bay front won informal approval from Sidney Township council Monday.

Ralph Crysler representing Crysler and Latham consultants, pointed out that the study is not making firm recommendations but offering a number of alternatives for bayside municipalities.

The study — calling for a long-range recreational development plan for the Bay of Quinte waterfront in the Belleville area — was commissioned by the Moira River Conservation Authority.

For the Sidney Township sector of the study area, consultants have tentatively suggested a biking trail to follow Highway 2, walking trails along the shoreline in the vicinity of Belleville cemetery and a community centre facility east of the Bay of Quinte Golf course. Questioned about the walkway along the cemetery's perimeter, Mr. Crysler commented: "It's very peaceful to walk through the area."

The community centre particularly caught council's fancy though no formal resolution of approval was taken.

Mr. Crysler emphasized the centre would not be intended as a sporting facility but for more passive recreations such as theatre, arts and crafts, and the like.

French Students Made Honorary Citizens

Mayor Robin Jeffrey made 17 French-Canadian students honorary citizens of Belleville during an afternoon ceremony at City Hall, Monday.

In council chambers, the mayor bestowed the honor upon the exchange group of students visiting the Quinte area for two weeks.

Part of a program sponsored by the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews, the group had spent part of the afternoon touring the Deloro Refinery, before arriving at City Hall for the presentation.

The visit continues with another week.

PUC Rejects Claim For Water Damage

The Belleville Public Utilities Commission formally rejected Monday a water damage claim by a local resident saying they didn't want to set a precedent.

Previously, the $50 claim for damages caused by a break in a water pipe, was being considered and may have been paid as a goodwill gesture, said Neil Britton, general manager of the utilities commission.

"Legally, technically and morally we were not responsible for the damage," he said, in an interview following the commissions monthly meeting.

During the meeting Gerry O'Connor, a member of the commission, expressed the feelings of other municipal council members he encountered at a regional meeting.

He said it was the general consensus the claim should be rejected because it was unsafe to set a precedent even if the amount was small.

The commission agreed with the advice and, following the recommendation of their lawyer and insurance company, sent a letter to the property owner involved.

Police Chase Brings Arrest

MADOC — A 24-year-old Belleville man has been charged with dangerous driving and speeding following a 30-minute high-speed chase early today that covered 56 miles and crossed three township lines.

George Walter Reid, of Ann St., Belleville, was apprehended by Belleville city police at his home around 2:45 a.m. early today. The high speed chase, that reached speeds of 125 miles per hour, originated on th of Moira Lake on Highway 62 about 1:15 a.m.

Constables Bill Reid and Derrick Travitss of the Madoc OPP began to chase the late model car on Highway 62. After more than an one-hour chase the provincial constable lost the car.

Madoc OPP notified the Belleville police who spotted the car near the man's home. He will appear in Madoc provincial court Aug. 12.

Rape Suspect In Court

Lynn William Parker, 21, of 230A West Moira St., in Belleville, charged in connection with the rape of a 22-year-old Chatham woman here Thursday has been remanded to next Monday in provincial court at which time a trial date will be set.

A city police spokesman said today Parker appeared in court for the first time Monday.

Parker has been charged with one count of rape in connection with the incident which occurred at about 6 p.m. near a foot path in a wooded area between Tracy St. and Bell Blvd.

Hike for Blueberries Becomes Nightmare

There are still blueberries to be found in the Quinte bush.

But today there are also Belleville-area people — including a young brother and sister — who won't bother much about finding the wild fruit in future.

They're resting after a carefree berry-picking hike in the county woods that turned into a 20-hour ordeal in swampy mosquito-infested bush.

"No. Never for blueberries. I've had an experience now," said 23-year-old Harold Prest, RR 1 Corbyville, as he recuperated Monday night.

It's a sentiment readily echoed by his sister, Mrs. Thelma Goodfellow, and two of her seven children, Cathie, 13 and Roy 10.

Sunday, Mr. Prest set off with his sister — a resident on Tyendinaga Township's eighth concession near the Moira River — and, with the two younger Goodfellows, headed north of Madoc to pick blueberries.

They drove into what they believe was the Cooper area in northeast Madoc Township, parked the car off a dead-end sideroad in a wooded area — and strode into the bush.

At first they noticed nothing amiss. Then, about three hours later, after climbing around beaver ponds — they realized they had lost their bearings.

What threw their sense of direction was the ponds and climing over beaver houses. In the rocky bush, said Mrs. Goodfellow.

After several hours wading swamps and climbing rocks, they tried following the sun toward the west.

After the initial shock, said Mrs. Goodfellow, her two children remained in high spirits, often laughed because "they couldn't believe this was happening to us."

The worst part came with the dark. They followed a hollow, covered themselves with layers of boughs to keep off bugs.

"But the mosquitoes were unreal," said Mr. Prest, father of two and drug-store bookmaking manager.

At dawn they began follow the sun again, this time to the south figuring eventually to reach Highway 7.

But their concerns were also for their families back home, said Mrs. Goodfellow.

When they failed to show Sunday night Harry Prest and Harvey Goodfellow — who also works as a Canadian rail-marker — began exchanging anxious phone calls. Then they called the provincial police.

Early Monday morning police told Mr. Goodfellow to rendezvous with them at Actinolite to begin a search. When they seemed late in arriving he phoned the OPP at Madoc. Then he learned the party had been found.

What had happened in the interim: The four kept following the sun without any sign of highway or settlement. Suddenly they stumbled on an old logging trail.

"It was like a miracle," said Mrs. Goodfellow. After what seemed like 10 miles she said they suddenly came on a bungalow — the home of Mrs. Albert Campbell near Queensboro.

Mrs. Campbell fed them, even recognized the spot where they'd left their car from their description, said Mrs. Goodfellow. From there, they also phoned police and home to give them the all-clear.

The Last Berries?

These may be among the last wild blueberries this family group says it will pick in the bush. Mrs. Thelma Goodfellow, son Roy, 10 and daughter Cathie, 13, relax at home on Tyendinaga Township's eighth concession after spending night in mosquito-swarming outdoors. Her brother, fellow's brother, Harold Prest, RR 1, Corbyville, they became lost Sunday in Madoc Township on berry-picking expedition.

Tripping in Outdoors Still Four Weeks to Go

In the parlance of the hip generation (has it passed on to others?) you either dig it or you don't.

That is, some are turned on by what Wilderness Adventure has to offer, while for others, it's not their bag.

Wilderness Adventure (directors in Belleville are H. Cooke, head of the Physical Education Department at Moira Secondary School, and M. Dollack, supervisor of athletics at Bayside Secondary School) is a program dedicated to offering a unique program to residents of the Quinte area.

Dig it or not, the opportunity offered is one which should appeal to many. Its objectives are to provide canoe tripping opportunities so that young people can appreciate the outdoors; to promote physical fitness, self-discipline and the pleasure of being with others; and to develop skills necessary for successful canoeing and camping experiences.

Explains Michael Dollack, "Wilderness Adventure is offering a canoe tripping experience to all persons 11 years of age and over who have at least a minimum of swimming ability.

"Trips leave Belleville on Monday mornings and return on Friday evenings. That's five days of healthy activity and living in the out-of-doors.

"We offer several different canoe routes, depending on the individual's wishes and his or her capabilities.

"The cost is $60 ($12 per day) and covers transportation, food, canoes, paddles, tents and life jackets.

"Participants must provide their personal gear, including sleeping bags."

Groups of eight plus a leader make up the personnel for a trip. The next four weeks are booked solid but that leaves four weeks for organized similar trips.

More information and application forms may be obtained by writing, Wilderness Adventure, 238 Bleecker Ave., Belleville, or call 967-1325.

I dig it. Do you?

SLICES — That dusk 'til dawn rally organized by members of the Quinte Auto Sport Club last weekend, proved to be a success.

Entries from Picton, Napanee, Kingston, Toronto and Belleville took part in the 196-mile jaunt which began just after 10 p.m., Saturday, and wound up about 5 a.m. Sunday.

Says organizer Ginger Marshall, "The 27-Consolidated Radio Club's assistance proved invaluable as they relayed messages while manning the checkpoints and we knew at all times where the competitors were."

Ken Wright and Bill Bachellier from Napanee took first place in a BMW, with 15 points. Second place went to Greg Gingrich and Dave Morgan of Kingston in a Datsun, 29 points. Belleville's Mike McCarey and Richard Woodley were third, driving a Volvo. They had 32 penalty points.

Thurlow Gets the Nod In 12-inning Contest

When the Yardmen hook up, things happen. And in an Eastern Ontario Baseball Association midget contest Sunday, at Centennial Park, Trenton and Belleville teams sponsored by the Belleville Legion Ladies Auxiliary Fund, produced a 12-inning thriller. Thurlow took a 5-3 decision with a three-run burst in the top of the 12th.

Belleville battled to score once in the bottom of the 12th but it was too late, too late as winning pitcher Barry Beer shut off the rally.

The teams were tied 1-1 after nine innings and each team scored once in the 11th frame.

Beer, and Belleville's Gary Stapley, both went the distance with Thurlow holding a 14-7 edge in the hitting department. Beer recorded 22 on third strikes and walked only one. Stapley, fanned 15 and issued just two free tickets to first.

Beer got most of his support at the plate from Brad Sullivan who connected for a home run, two triples and a single. Dave Chisholm collected three singles and Tom Crook had a pair.

Tops for the losers was Mike Burke who homered and singled. Gary Gow was in step with a triple and a single.

It was a good weekend for Thurlow. In peewee action, Thurlow Plane's Concrete subdued Alex 13-4.

Winning pitcher Dale Forestall spun a seven-hitter while fanning seven and walking two.

Leading the winners at the homer and a single, and Boyd Sullivan, a double and two singles.

At Peterborough, Saturday, Belleville Broadloom spelled Peterborough Miners an early 4-0 lead and then bounced back to record a 14-7 peewee victory.

Rory MacLeod and Tony Parks shared the Belleville pitching, limiting the home side to five hits. Dave Steve Morgan went all the way in defeat. He was touched for 13 safeties.

Parks had three Belleville singles with Hugh Nordhey and Dave Mortemon each supplying a pair. David Malkawa doubled while Brian Cronkright, Glenn McCoy and Mike Skelly each punched out a single.

Nicklaus Still Leads

WASHINGTON (AP) — Roger Maltbie's $15,000 win in the Quad Cities Open golf tournament gave him among the top 50 money-winners on the Professional Golfers Association circuit, the association said Monday. Maltbie's 1973 earnings now are $34,907. Jack Nicklaus leads with $180,799, followed by Johnny Miller, $180,870 Hale Irwin, $175,627; Tom Watson, whose $16,200 win in the British Open did not count in the standings, $130,751; Tom Weiskopf, $129,560; John Mahaffey, $121,665; Al Geiberger, $111,742; Gene Littler, $111,163; Bob Murphy, $110,927, and Lee Trevino, $104,573.

Fitcher's Night in QFL Three Teams Scoreless

Auger Men's Wear and Bardon Supplies staged a real pitcher's show for Quinte Fastball League fans on Monday night at the Alemite.

It was the second game of the doubleheader and pitchers Darryl Kramp (Auger's) and Ken Demille (Bardon) went nine innings without allowing a runner to cross the plate. Final score 0-0.

In the first game, Devolin Motors defeated the Ellis Juniors 3-0.

Demille pitched no-hit ball for Bardon until the ninth inning, giving up a double to Dennis Orr. He walked no batters and struck out one.

Kramp had his longest outing of the season, giving up just four hits and two walks while striking out nine batters.

Wayne McConnell led Bardon's batters with two singles, while Ron Weese and Carl Stacey both singled once.

The only Auger hit was Orr's double in the ninth.

In the first game Devolin Motors' batters gave pitcher Don Holoway a 3-0 lead in the first inning, and that's the way it stayed.

Holoway pitched shutout ball for Devolin Motors, going all seven innings with just four hits, one walk and four strikeouts.

The loss went to John Sprackett, who gave up seven hits and one walk while gaining five strikeouts.

Threats at the plate for Devolin Motors were, Gary Johnson, with a triple and a single, Gary Goyer with a double and Rick Watt with two singles. Eric Maher and John Burnside also singled.

Safeties for the Juniors were given Ken Voss, with two singles and Peter Stakhovich and Mike Crawford singled once.

The tie in the second game of the doubleheader was the first to be recorded in the QFL this season.

Pocket Rocket Retires

MONTREAL (CP) — After 20 years and 1,256 games in the National Hockey League, Henri Richard has decided to retire from Montreal Canadiens.

The diminutive 39-year-old centre, who played on a record 11 Stanley Cup championship teams, made the announcement Monday at a hastily-called news conference.

"It's a very difficult decision for me," he said. "After 20 years, a good thing is coming to an end."

Richard, who had another year to go on a two-year contract, said the rigors of a heavy travel schedule and his age were factors in his decision.

"The deal... to play hockey was mining a little because of these factors. I had another year to go on my contract . . . I worked out a settlement with the club."

During his career, Richard scored 358 goals and 688 assists in regulation play. In 1972-73, 74, he was awarded the Bill Masterton Memorial Trophy presented annually to the player best exemplifying perseverance, sportsmanship and dedication to hockey.

HENRI RICHARD

Richard played in only 18 regular-season games with Montreal in 1974-75. He broke his left ankle in a game against Buffalo Sabres Nov. 13 and did not return to action until the Canadiens started their playoff against the Sabres.

At times during the series, Richard was one of Montreal's better performers. In six games, he had one goal and a pair of assists.

His commitment caused some stormy moments during the 39-year-old's career in the Canadiens.

During the 1971 Stanley Cup finals against Chicago Black Hawks, he called Al MacNeil, the worst coach he had ever played under. Two years later, he and teammate Serge Savard engaged in an argument after a game and Richard slapped Savard across the face.

Richard did not dress for the Canadiens' 1974-75 opener against New York Islanders last Oct. 9, touching off controversy with current Montreal coach Scotty Bowman.

Richard's brother Maurice was honored that evening along with several other Canadiens elected to Hockey Hall of Fame and Henri was upset because he was not in attendance for the ceremonies.

Richard had enjoyed some great moments in a Montreal uniform. In 1960, he scored the Cup-winning goal in the sixth game of the Canadiens final series against Toronto Red Wings and five years later, he got the game-winning goal in the seventh game of Montreal's final against Chicago.

"Henri was associated with me 23 years and he was a great Canadiens," said Sam Pollock, the Canadiens' former manager. "Then he went up to the Canadiens in 1955. He never speaks for himself. I'm sure it won't be long before Henri's name . . . will be mentioned in the hall of fame."

Pollock said Richard's No. 16 will be officially retired at a ceremony before a game next season.

Richard now will devote his time to running a brasserie in downtown Montreal and will be actively involved with the Canadiens any more.

"But although he will not actively be working here, he will always be a part of our family," Pollock said.

Dukes Edged

WOODSTOCK, Ont. (CP) — Woodstock Warriors edged London Dukes 3-1 Monday in the only Ontario Football League game scheduled.

The Western Division now are 18-1-1, one-half game behind Newmarket Rays, the east division league leaders.

Don Reeder threw a six-hitter for the Warriors and struck out two.

Dick Hames went the distance for the Dukes, giving up three hits and walking the third out.

Warriors wasted no time in getting a jump on the west division leaders. Pat Werby started the batting rally in the first inning with a double.

Terry Lumbis followed and went to first on an error by Hames. Werby went to third on the error, Lumbi stole second and Randy Hewitt singled both runners in.

London came close to scoring in the top of the third after Barry Vaynham singled, went to second on a sacrifice by Hames and to third on an error before the next two batters were put out.

Woodstock picked up their third and final hit of the game in the fourth when Hewitt hit his second double.

The Dukes got on the scoreboard in the eighth. Hames reached on an error by shortstop Lamb and was substituted by runner Bob Cross.

Charles Winger doubled Cross home and made third on a sacrifice before the inning closed.

Bill Fairbairn kept London's hopes alive in the ninth when he hit a double with only one out. He was then put out on a fielder's choice at second and the next batter flied out to win the game.

With No Major Changes, Bucs Are Still a Power

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Montreal Expos heralded the 1975 baseball season as the start of La Pasta Deux or Pasta Two, the arrival of their farm talent. They're last in the National League east division.

Chicago hit-man Bill Madlock helped the Cubs take over first place April 8 and they stayed until June. Now they're fifth.

St. Louis Cardinals made several winter moves and were acclaimed as the division's most improved team. They're fourth.

And New York Mets, with Joe Torre, Dave Kingman and Del Unser, are third.

Philadelphia Phillies caused a stir when they lured Dick Allen out of the home business. And they're a distinct second.

In Pittsburgh, there've been no major changes. Danny Murtaugh's Pirates are still atop the division, threatening to make a runaway of the National League east en route to their fifth divisional title in six years.

The only Pirate pennant lapse in the last five seasons came in 1973 when Roberto Clemente was killed in a plane crash, all-star pitcher Steve Blass was stricken with loss of control and Bob Robertson went from slugger to a .195 hitter.

The Pirates lead the National League with 30 home runs and they're third in team batting with a .268 average, Jerry Reuss (10-6, 2.22 ERA) is the only 10-game winner on the staff, but the team ERA of 3.11 ranks second only to Los Angeles Dodgers.

The last time the Pirates were this far over .500 was 1972 when they finished with the best season record in either league.

On paper—and in Philadelphia—the Phillies are as awesome as reliever Tug Mcgraw says they are. They've beaten the Pirates seven of 10 times including four straight at home.

Greg Luzinski leads the majors in homers with 25 and runs batted in with 78, and Dave Cash leads the majors in hits with 122.

The Phillies are 16-27 away from Veterans Stadium, but Allen could help change that. He hit four homers in the first half, but was the American League home run leader last year. Another boost could come from Mike Schmidt, the major league home run leader last of any, who has 16 homers with 100 strikeouts.

The Mets dealt some pitching talent and cash to acquire Torre, Unser and Kingman, and have still scored fewer runs than all but San Diego Padres and Montreal.

In St. Louis, the Cardinals started the season with new coach Ed Brinkman at short, young Keith Hernandez at first and former Met Ray Sadecki in the bullpen, a lot of hitters and the Cardinals lead the league in personnel changes.

If Chicago, the Cubs' bright hope for a second half may be young Madlock's bid for the National League batting crown.

If Montreal, manager Gene Mauch has a young, revamped team. It has had several injury pains. Gone are veterans Mike Torrez, Willie Davis, Ken Singleton and Felipe Alou, who is counting on the likes of Gary Carter, Larry Bittner, Ron Barry Foote, who helped Montreal win 15 in last 18 games a year ago.

It looks as if the Phillies and Mets have outside chances, but it's a longshot. Bookmakers betting on the Pirates to take the National League's east division and meet the Oakland Athletics in the post-season playoffs.

LPGA Champion Had That Feeling

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Carol Mann had a feeling she would win the $65,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament ending Monday. And she did.

"I had the same motel room number, 106, as Medina. I felt something that a lot," she said after winning the storm-delayed LPGA event. Medina, Ohio, was Miss Mann's other 1975 triumph.

On Monday, she knocked in a 2½-foot par putt on the final hole for a final one-over-par 73. Her 209 total put her seven under par for the 54-hole tournament and one shot ahead of Jan Ferraris.

Miss Mann matched par in her final four holes for the $9,000 first prize and her 36th career victory, which ties her parris scrambled to a par on the lone hole she had left, finishing with a 69 210 for $6,700.

Nine players returned Monday after play was interrupted four times Sunday because of mid-summer storms.

Carole Jo Skala was third at 211. Laura Baugh finished with a 71 and Sandra Haynie a 72 Monday to share fourth spot with JoAnne Carner, Australian Penny Pulz at 213.

Joeslyne Bourassa of Shawinigan, Que., shot a final round 71 to finish at 214 for sixth at 433. Sandra Post, formerly of Oakville, Ont., had a three-round total of 217 and earned $613.

A's Vida Blue

A. L. Starter Is Confident

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Vida Blue, with little regard for the Oakland A's being a recent victory of all-star frustration, still exudes confidence.

It was not the last time the American League won one I was the starting pitcher," said the Oakland A's left-hander. "I don't see Jimmy the Greek here, but maybe that gives us a little advantage.

"There is no doubt in my mind the American League is just as good as the National."

The American League, led by seven players from the world champion A's, will try to back up Blue's boast in baseball's 46th midsummer showcase at Milwaukee County Stadium tonight, starting at 8:30 p.m. EDT.

The American League's only victory in the last 11 all-star games was by a 6-4 score in Detroit in 1971.

Determined to reverse that trend, American manager Alvin Dark of Oakland said he would use all of his starting pitchers. All pitchers on the American League squad were withheld from Sunday's games in an effort to gain an all-star edge.

"Vida might go three innings, but no pitcher will bat," Dark said. "If we had around in the first inning I'll probably pinch-hit for Vida.

"We're going to play to win this game. I'm sure (National League manager) Walter Alston will do the same."

Dark's pitching corps was bolstered late Monday when Jim Palmer, Baltimore's 13-game winner, said he was ready and able to pitch following examination of his sore arm.

Dark had planned to add A's reliever Paul Lindblad if Palmer couldn't pitch, but Lindblad will continue to serve as batting practice pitcher.

Dark's other starting pitchers are Steve Busby, Catfish Hunter, Jim Kaat and Nolan Ryan. He has Rollie Fingers and Rich Gossage as bullpen specialists.

They will confront a National League batting order consisting of Pete Rose, Cincinnati, right field; Lou Brock, St. Louis, left field; Joe Morgan, Cincinnati, second base; Johnny Bench, Cincinnati, catcher; Steve Garvey, Los Angeles, first base; Jimmy Wynn, Los Angeles, centre field; Ron Cey, Los Angeles, third base; Dave Concepcion, Cincinnati, shortstop, and Jerry Reuss, Pittsburgh, pitcher.

"If we can't get runs with this club, then I'm in a sham," quipped Alston, the Dodgers' longtime manager.

Alston, whose pitchers did not have to be withheld from play last Sunday, wasn't sure who would follow Reuss, his freshest pitcher with four days of rest.

Alston said Dodger right-handed Don Sutton, sidelined for a week with a groin injury, wants to pitch and may be ready.

Tom Seaver and Andy Messersmith of the National League pitched 6 2-3 and 7 innings, respectively, Sunday.

Blue vowed to challenge National League hitters with "about 95 per cent fast balls."

"I don't think the all-star record indicated the National League is better," he said. "I think maybe the fans just haven't always voted for the best American League player. And Hank Aaron is on our side in this fight."

$6.5 Million Offer

Saints Bid for Orr

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — The Pioneer Press says in a copy right story today that Boston Bruin superstar Bobby Orr has been offered a $6.5 million, five-year contract by Minnesota Fighting Saints and the World Hockey Association.

The deal would make the largest in hockey history and would include a cash payment of $1 million, The Pioneer Press said.

Earlier in the day, when Toronto Sun reported that Orr might sign with the WHA, a spokesman for Orr called it "strictly speculation." Then Bill Walters, an associate of Orr's lawyer, Allan Eagleson, confirmed a multi-million dollar offer had been made by the WHA.

Orr has a year left on his contract with the National Hockey League Bruins which calls for a reported $250,000 annually.

Bobby has no comment," said Walters. "He has not indicated one way or another. Nothing has been consummated nor will there be until the Bruins become part of the negotiation."

The newspaper said the Saints would pay approximately 40 per cent of the contract with the league picking up the rest.

A spokesman for the Bruins said Eagleson had told them "he would be sitting down with negotiations on the contract."

Hang Defeat on Roughies

Eskimos Are Opportunists

REGINA (CP) — Edmonton Eskimos took advantage of all their breaks Saturday night to defeat Saskatchewan Roughriders 36-22 in a Western Division game.

Although the Eskimos managed only six first downs, they benefited from an interception by Dick Dupuis which led to a touchdown and a late fumble recovery by Sam Britts that enabled Edmonton to break a 15-all tie.

Dupuis opened scoring by scampering 25 yards for a touchdown in the first quarter after intercepting a pass from Ron Lancaster.

Don Warrington took a 35-yard pass from Tom Wilkinson in the fourth quarter for the other Edmonton touchdown as the Eskimos extended their unbeaten streak in exhibition games to three games.

The rest of Edmonton's scoring was provided by Dave Culver, who had two converts and four field goals—from 25, 26 and 14 yards.

Short interceptions by George Reed and Steve Molnar accounted for Saskatchewan touchdowns. Brian Berg converted one and kicked three field goals.

After Molnar's meaningless touchdown in the final three seconds, quarterback Dave Mattingly's short pass attempt to Jim Popp in the end zone failed.

Eskimos coach Ray Jauch, who began immediately to prepare for the Western final against Calgary Stampeders, said he believed Saskatchewan wanted to win more than the Eskimos did.

"We wanted to experiment," said Jauch, who started rookie Dennis Morrison at quarterback. Morrison, a graduate who played last season in the National Football League, had been overseas than veteran Wilkinson and Bruce Lemmerman in training camp.

Jauch, who sparked Saskatchewan in solid third-quarter display, was shaken when he learned the second quarter by promoton tackle Dave Fennell, who drew a rough-play penalty, Coach John Payne of Saskatchewan said he is not disturbed that his club, considered by many Edmonton's toughest challenge in the Western Conference, won only one of four exhibition games.

He was concerned, however, that the Roughriders had difficulty advancing along the ground. Reed led the ground-gainers with 51 yards in 17 carries.

Saskatchewan committed 21 first downs to Edmonton's six. The Riders relied on long pass attempts—Lancaster was 6-for-14 of 22 attempts—for 238 yards. Edmonton quarterbacks completed six of 17 attempts and no player caught more than one pass.

Davis A Hit In Debut

ANAHEIM (AP) — Anthony Davis scored 26 points Monday night as the Southern California Sun smothered Memphis Southmen 47-18 in a World Football League exhibition game in Anaheim Larry Csonka, John Kiick and Paul Warfield played minor units.

Csonka, who received an estimated $1.4 million contract, played only the first half in his WFL debut gaining only 22 yards on four carries.

Warfield, the second of the three Miami Dolphins switched to the WFL, caught, also one pass for 28 yards as he also played only the first half.

Kiick played both halves but fumbled the ball early twice in the first for four yards and three times in the second without a net gain.

Davis, in his rookie year of professional football, highlighted the action before 24,610 in Anaheim Stadium.

He scored touchdowns on runs of four, three and one yards and caught a 17-yard touchdown pass from reserve quarterback Mike Ernst.

City Archers Top Competitors

By ALAN TESWORTH

The Belleville area has once again been well represented at the Canadian Championship level in archery. In the Championships held in Caledon, about 15 miles north west of Brampton this past week, two Belleville area archers brought home second and fifth place finishes.

Linda Adamson took second place in the Junior Girls' category, for the second straight year, while Jean Mainland, competing in her first Canadian Championship, captured fifth place in the Senior Women's division.

The second place finish by Linda was somewhat disappointing, after finishing in the same spot last year, in 1974 at the Championships held in Prince Albert, Saskatchewan. Linda shot an aggregate total of 2,3,3,3,3, about 200 points behind winner Patti Thompson of Ottawa, and formerly of Belleville. Linda had only a year of experience at the time.

This year, after another year of practice, and coaching under Floyd Armstrong, she improved her score by about 540 points. Still she finished second.

Nancy Lovo, of Calgary, who finished third last year with a 2,4,4,4,4 added nearly 800 points to her total to a 3,066 and the first place gold medal, and a new Junior record.

But it was not all bad for the grade 13 student at Centennial Secondary School. Linda did set one record herself, and tied another. In her first day of target shooting, Linda collected 1901 points out of a possible 1200 in the Canadian 1200 round.

The round consists of 120 arrows shot from varying distances — 30, 40, 50 and 60 metres. It was in the 60 metre round that she set a new record, collecting a 338 out of a possible 360 score.

In the second round of target, the 19-year-old shot 992 out of 1440 in the FITA (International) round, with distances of 30, 50, 60 and 70 metres. She tied the record at the 30 metre distance.

However in shooting the two rounds that placed her only about 50 points behind Lovo, and in a good spot to catch up with usually good field rounds to come, Linda developed a bad blister on the index finger of her drawing hand. The blister caused great pain when shooting and the result showed it, with a 297 score of a possible 600 in the first round of field shooting.

She bounced back in the final of the four rounds on Friday, however regaining her old form and coming in with a 311 (out of 600), in the Hunter round, cementing away second place by 32 points. Taking the third place was Yolande Valaskouvit of Quebec, with a 2888.

But the 19-year-old archer had by no means given up with the second place silver medals. She was part of a threesome that won a provincial challenge among the juniors during the tourney, teaming up with Clinton Sebewchuk and Scott McKercher, both of Ottawa, to defeat British Columbia by a two point margin, 9002-9000 giving her a gold medal in the event.

She's aiming now at the Ontario Summer Games, on the Labor Day weekend, to be held at London's University of Western Ontario. As well, with the Olympics coming up next year in Montreal, there's a chance at the Canadian team.

To qualify for the team, one must first attain the standard to go to the Olympic trials, to be held next June. To qualify, a woman must shoot four rounds of at least 1050 in a FITA round, while a man must attain 1150 within the next year. Linda has shot only six FITA rounds with the 992 score her best so far, although she has improved each time out.

She'll receive some pretty stiff competition for the Olympic team, competing against all the women archers in Canada for the two berths.

Linda Adamson

Jean Mainland

included in the list is this year's Women's Champ, Lucille Lessard, of Quebec, whose total was 3428 for her four rounds at the Caledon shoot.

Jean Mainland, who finished 5th in the Senior Women's Division, has one of her arrows, the 1050 round, in her pocket, having shot 1136 in her FITA round at Caledon. Along with that, she put together a 1041 in the Canadian 1200, a 323 in field and a 330 in hunter to come up with a 3240 round, just 26 place out of fourth place, held by Wanda Allen of BC.

Jean was very pleased with her performance at Caledon, her first crack at the Canadians. She decided to give the big one a try after she got a new bow, in January of this year.

After shooting for about five years, and having only competed in the Ontario Championships previously, she has been practicing two to three hours daily since the end of March to get herself in top shooting form. The practice paid off with the placing out of 46 competitors in the class. Her score was tops among the competitors from Ontario.

Jean originally got into the sport through the Minor Archery program of the city's recreation department, where Floyd Armstrong was coaching. Armstrong is still her coach today, and she lands him a lot of credit for her success.

Armstrong 'doesn't pull a bad bow himself. He finished in 24th place in the open Mens' division, out of a field of about 90 archers.

Other Belleville archers who competed at Caledon were Eleanor Kinnear, who finished 19th in the Women's division and Steve Lightfoot, in the open Mens' division.

Y's Men in Top Form

Y's Men went on a goal scoring spree in the Belleville Minor Lacrosse Associations Tyke-Novice Division when they defeated Dairy Queen 13-1.

Joe Marriott led a team effort, scoring two goals and gaining two assists.

The only Dairy Queen marker went to Karl Wedderburn.

Quinte Mall defeated Esso Car Wash 9-3, Mike Hall scored nine goals for the winners, Jim Thompson popped in two for the losers.

In the Midget-Juvenile division A1 and D Esso squeaked past Local 186 11-10. Goals for Esso were scored by Rob Thompson with five and Roger Chapman with three.

Wally Inwood scored four, while Paul Thompson scored three for the losers.

Steve Riddell and Rob Soule with a hat trick each led Cementmen to a 9-1 win over Bud Gill in Bantam division action.

Deseronto Ken - Yen - Geh managed their first win of the season 5-3 over Bob's Sports, Brian Maracle scored three goals.

In Peewee play goalies Jan Ice Cream Bowl Bryson L'Ambie fought it out to a 4-4 tie as the Police Association played Dairy Queen.

Keith Semark did even better than that as he managed a shutout in Woodland Cleaners 5-0 win over Pundersons with Brent Hall and Dave Potts scoring two each.

In Peewee action again Belleville Lions club found the goalies tough against Gerrard Rd., they were defeated 9-2. Craig Sashby and Bryson L'Amble scored for Belleville.

SPECIAL PROGRAM REVIEW

The Government of Ontario has established a Special Program Review to enquire into ways and means of reducing the costs of Government and public sector expenditures.

The Special Program review will welcome the views of the public on various courses of action which the Government might take to reduce public expenditures. Therefore, they will receive written briefs from any individual, group, organization or association which can provide suggestions to:

(1) operate the existing programs of government more efficiently and economically;
(2) deliver the desired public services in a different way to give better service at reduced cost;
(3) reduce the level of service of programs whose benefits no longer have as high a priority as they once had;
(4) phase out programs which have outlived their usefulness.

Briefs are requested by September 15, 1975.

Volleyball Interests Producers

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Why are two successful television producers promoting a brand new professional volleyball team?

"We saw real volleyball for the first time in the Munich Olympics of 1972," says David M. Gerber, executive vice-president of Columbia Pictures Television and executive producer of such series as Police Woman and Police Story.

"We felt that it has the dynamic qualities to become the next big spectator sport in the United States.

"It's a game that has an immense amount of excitement," says David L. Wolper, famed documentary maker whose Visions of Eight was the official film of the 1972 Olympics. "And it is the only major team sport in which men and women can compete on an equal basis. Our rules require that two women be included in the six players on each side at all times."

Wolper and Gerber are owners of the team, the Los Angeles Stars, and Wolper is also president of the International Volleyball Association, which includes teams in Santa Barbara, San Diego, Irvine and El Paso-Juarez. The producers were hosts at a celebrity party for the Stars' first home game at Santa Monica City College, the guests including Diana Ross, Connie Stevens and Wayne Rogers.

The Stars, who had been 0-4, managed a close win over Santa Barbara.

Actress Misses Gunsmoke

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Amanda Blake has no urge to reopen the Long Branch saloon in Gunsmoke, the TV series which made her famous as Miss Kitty, but admits to an occasional twinge of nostalgia for the life of a series actress.

"If I'd known it was only going to last a year after I left, I'd have stayed on," she said in an interview. "I could see that show running for another 20 years, but not with me."

Her only acting since has been in a television movie.

Miss Blake, who has been married to wealthy retired businessman Frank Gilbert for eight years, is a native of Buffalo, N.Y., who migrated west in 1946. She said she made up her mind in high school that she wanted to be an actress.

She said her selection as Miss Kitty didn't "just happen."

"Frankly, I think I just made such a nuisance of myself there decided to get me off their back," she said. "Gunsmoke had been a successful radio show for many years before and I was determined to go with it on TV."

That she did and stayed with it until the surprise announcement last year that she was leaving the show. She praised its star, Jim Arnett, as "a wonderful man" to work with.

A woman of diverse interests, Miss Blake is known to a growing number of Arizonans, especially legislators, for her dedication to preserving wildlife.

Behind the Gilberts' two-story, Spanish stucco home in northeast Phoenix is more than an acre of shaded pens where her pet lion, Kemo, seven cheetahs, a leopard, a pair of raccoons and a desert kit fox roam.

Miss Blake said her real interest now is doing an "honest animal documentary."

She and her husband spent several months in Africa last year.

"Africa is doing little to protect its most valuable asset, the wildlife," she said. "Some of the game wardens are poaching on the preserves they're hired to protect."

She said she is corresponding with Roger Caras, an author and conservationist in New York, about going back to Africa and preparing a documentary.

Fun Outside the City

More than 600 boys and girls, who otherwise would spend the hot summer within the boundaries of downtown Toronto, are getting a refreshing breather in the cool countryside. Showbiz Shorts

HOLLYWOOD, Calif. (Reuter) — Dancer Ray Bolger, the straw man in the Wizard of Oz and now 71, put on his dancing shoes Wednesday to appear in a dramatic and dancing screen role after a 10-year retirement from the movies.

The crew of the film The Entertainer burst into applause as Bolger, looking as agile as a man of 30, went through rapid-fire tap dance routines, spun of his role much more tiring.

The film is a remake of the John Osborne stage play with Jack Lemmon playing the Archie Rice role, originally performed by Sir Laurence Olivier, and Bolger as his father.

Your Horoscope

By BERNICE BEDE OSOL

For Wednesday, July 16

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Your day will be happier if you concentrate on helping friends or family, rather than pursuing self-interest.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You are attuned to verbal or written communication today. You must, however, be wary of offending by thoughtless actions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Lax, especially if physical labor, will depress you. Take a lighthearted shopping trip or visit some friends if you can.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) The confines of the home and family will make your day more pleasant. Pals, even close ones, will get under your skin.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Your mood is subdued. You must be careful that someone in authority doesn't mistake your lowkey, attitude for indifference to duties.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Stay in familiar areas if involved in a group discussion. Otherwise, your lack of knowledge will be easily exposed.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Friends will make you feel a banana today. Don't let this turn your head so much you become overly-generous.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You're able to accomplish most anything you want to today. Guard against becoming too cocky and thus offending less capable friends.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) If possible, avoid physical labor or work with tools or machinery today. Sports activity would be safer for you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You'll be very nervous in a large social gathering today. Choose a close friend or two. Have a quiet get-together.

AQUARIUS (J an. 20-Feb. 19) At work you'll get many pats on the back and words of praise. Don't expect the same reception at home.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) If you want to communicate with a friend, write a letter. It's likely, if you drop over to his house, he won't be home.

By OSWALD and JAMES JACOBY

In the language of bids, North's two notrump call is either an absolute, one-round force or a strong invitation for South to bid again.

It is a bid of one less than game.

South's three-diamond call conveys the message, "I don't have the number of high-card points I should have for my initial two-diamond response, nor do I have a running diamond suit. If you want to bring game into play, do so at your own risk."

Change North's hand so that his spades are headed by queen-jack and his pack of diamonds is the ace. He has the same distribution and the same 14 high-card points but he would know that his ace of diamonds may be the key to six or seven diamond tricks. He should bid three notrump.

As it is, North realizes that diamonds are not going to run. While South may have something in one of the unbid suits, he is almost certain that he is not bold strength in both, so North passes.

Against a heart lead North can go down six tricks at three notrump. He might bring it in against some other lead, but you expect your opponents to defend well and North and South should be happy when South brings his diamond partscore home.

Ask the Jacobys

East bids one spade. You double with:

♠ 2 ♥ K J 5 4 ♦ A K Q 7 2 ♣ A Q 3.

West bids two spades which it passed around to you. What do you do now?

The correct bid is to double again. This second double is still for takeout. If you bid three diamonds you may be losing the best suit. If you pass you are giving up when you should be going ahead.

Minors Visit Miners

CAPE BRETON, N.S. (CP) — School students from Ross Road Elementary School in Halifax visited the Miners Village in the Sydney-Glace Bay industrial region of Cape Breton as part of a four-day tour of eastern Nova Scotia in conjunction with their social studies program. The trip was made possible by funding from the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews, the Nova Scotia Youth Agency, the Black United Front and almost $700 raised by the children themselves.

Answer to Previous Puzzle

Lack of Vitamins Can Crack Mouth

To Your Good Health

By G. C. Thoslesen, MD

Dear Dr. Thoslesen: I am 22 and am in good health. But maybe once or twice a year the corners of my mouth crack. After applying creams and trying to keep my lips moist, the cracks heal up but leave unattractive scars.

Do you know why this happens to me, and how it can be prevented?—Miss L.N.

I cannot tell you what the specific problem is in your case, but I can offer a few general thoughts that might apply.

The fissure that develops when comes to mind is what is called "angular stomatitis." This is usually related to a vitamin deficiency, and the symptoms are erosions and fissures at the angles (corners) of the mouth — Hence the name. Stomatitis means any inflammation of the mucosal membranes of the mouth.

The usual vitamin deficiency is in vitamin B group, and you might investigate whether your episodes can be related to variations in your intake of vitamin B during the year. A primary source is milk and other animal protein food.

The same symptoms can be caused by sensitivity to some material, by chronic diarrhea, a liver problem or chronic alcoholism. You should have a blood test to rule out the possibility of anemia, even though you say you are in good health. Anemia can be a subtle and unsuspected problem.

Such symptoms, needless to say, do not occur without a reason, and it is to determine that what that is. It is rather easy to alleviate the condition with vitamins, either in supplement form or in diet, if that is the underlying cause.

Dear Dr. Thoslesen: Isn't it true that if a person wanted to do it, he or she could lose the desired amount of weight without dieting? Isn't food strong enough to do it? I mean, take a person like me. I'm a woman, 5 feet 6 inches tall, weighing 147 pounds. Can I do it without dieting?

I have no dirting willpower, so you can see why I'm interested in your answer. — Mrs. F.E.

Sure you can do it, but it might take you quite a while. I'm assuming you at present tend to overdo on fattening foods, or just eat too much.

A recent, very interesting study shows it can be done. In a University of California study, a group of overweight women managed to lose an average of 22 pounds over a year strictly on the basis of exercise.

The women used brisk walks as their exercise. It was reported that no weight was lost until the walks went beyond a half hour a day. The greatest loss occurred in the women who walked up to two or three hours daily.

The weight loss was rather slow, and it was quickly put back on if the exercise stopped even for a few days. There was no dietary restriction. The researchers observed that even though exercise tended to increase appetite and food consumption somewhat, weight loss was still reported.

So I'd say you can, it can be done. But I believe a combination of reasonable diet and moderate exercise is the best method, and if you don't have the willpower to lose weight through cutting calories, I must wonder whether you would be able to summon sufficient motivation to follow an extended exercise regimen.

Dear Dr. Thoslesen: I have dilatees from my breast, but have had it for two years. It is dark green in color. No blood. I have had x-rays, and my doctor says it is not cancer.

It is painful, especially around the nipples. I have small breasts, but my nipples have enlarged since having this trouble. What should I do? I am 51. — E.C.

This could be a papilloma (a benign growth) or a cyst in the milk ducts. This can often produce such symptoms. Although they are non-malignant, they are often removed surgically with minimal distortion of the breast itself.

You probably should have this done, since it is causing you distress.

Grass Seed Glut Follows Housing Slump

OTTAWA (CP) — Creeping red fescue production in the Peace River district of Alberta and British Columbia seems happy with the current housing slump in Canada.

The low rate of housing starts, they complain, has reduced the demand for lawn grasses, such as creeping red fescue, and bumper crops in other countries have resulted in buildup of grass-seed stocks.

Canada is the major producer of the seed variety, grown largely in the Peace River district.

About 85 per cent is exported to the United States, the United Kingdom, Europe and Japan.

Producers of creeping red fescue complain they get about a pound for their crop in 1973.

"Prices are being paid 18 or 19 cents a pound," says R. C. Elliott, a Beaverlodge specialist at the agriculture department's research station at Beaverlodge, Alta.

The grass, he says, grows well in poor soil, has reasonably good shade tolerance and does require as much fertilizer as its major competitor, Kentucky bluegrass.

Creeping red fescue is widely used on playgrounds, parks, golf courses and cemeteries.

The Canadian harvest of creeping red fescue fell to 10 million pounds, harvested from about 65,000 acres.

High Failure Rate

WATERLOO, Ont. (CP) — A recent study of first-year engineering students at University of Waterloo indicates that more and more students are failing to make it into second year. The study dealt only with students entering the university directly out of Grade 13. Of those who entered an engineering program with 60 to 65 per cent high school average in 1968, 82 per cent eventually passed second year. Of those who entered the 1973 freshman class with the same high school average, only 42 per cent made it to second year.

Squabble on Technicality Wastes Commons Evening

OTTAWA (CP) — Opposition MPs settled on a technicality Monday night to embarrass the government and delay debate on the new 10-cents-a-gallon gasoline tax.

Division bells rang for more than an hour as Liberals scrambled to collect enough MPs to win an unexpected Commons vote forced by the Progressive Conservatives.

The Conservatives wanted to adjourn debate on the controversial bill until today, but their attempt was defeated 85 to 77. But the delay wiped out all but 40 minutes of a two-hour evening debate on the bill.

Speaker James Jerome gave the Conservatives the opening with a delayed ruling on a technical objection raised last week by Marcel Lambert (PC—Edmonton West), a former Speaker.

The veteran Alberta Conservative argued that the tax bill does not conform with a covering ways and means motion introduced in advance by the government. Ways and means motions, under parliamentary rules, must precede all tax changes.

Mr. Jerome agreed that the motion differs with the bill on one technical point and suggested that party House leaders seek a mutually acceptable solution. Brief discussions were held during the evening dinner break but no solution was found.

Conservative MPs objected to resumption of the debate when the House reconvened at 8 p.m. EDT. An amendment bringing the bill and motion into line should be introduced first, they argued.

When government spokesmen, including House Leader Mitchell Sharp disagreed, they called for an adjournment and demanded a recorded vote to settle the issue.

The government had to search out some MPs in parliamentary offices and others from home to muster voting strength.

Vienna Agency To Watch Candus

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada will rely on the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to oversee its nuclear reactors in other countries despite the possibility agency safeguards may be inferior, Energy Minister Donald Macdonald said Monday.

Allan Lawrence (PC—North Humberland-Durham) had said in the Commons that there is worldwide criticism that the Vienna-based agency cannot do its job properly because of a staff shortage.

Mr. Macdonald replied that the usual terms of the Nuclear non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) require that the agency supervise the operation of reactors in other countries. He said the IAEA has the "confidence and support of so many countries."

Mr. Lawrence retorted that "we don't believe the NPT is strong enough."

He said that India's nuclear bomb, developed through Canadian technology, is proof the agency is ineffective.

But Mr. Macdonald said the IAEA and the NPT did not exist when India acquired a Canadian-built research reactor, which produces plutonium in its spent fuel. Plutonium is used for nuclear bombs.

The situation has been brought to a head by, among other things, the proposed sale of a Candu reactor to Argentina.

External Affairs Minister Allan MacEachen said he has asked Argentina for permission to make public details of a draft contract between the two countries, but that this had not been received.

He told Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield that he will table the relevant papers in the Commons when permission is received.

Danson Is Disturbed About Mortgage Money

OTTAWA (CP) — Urban Affairs Minister Barney Danson says he is disturbed about the clashing vibrations he is getting from the mortgage market.

He said in an interview Monday he is seeking definite answers in the next couple of weeks from mortgage lenders on the availability of housing mortgage funds and how they are lending money.

"There are too many vibrations in this market—no consistency," he said. "This is disturbing me. Some seem to have money and some don't."

The minister repeated that he wants mortgage money shovelled into low-and moderate-priced housing.

He said he had heard from some builders that they have no trouble getting mortgage money for fancy, $200,000 houses but have more difficulty getting money for cheaper housing. But that still had to be checked out with the mortgage lenders.

Mr. Danson said he is concerned that mortgage lenders should provide money for small builders as well as big builders.

A comprehensive review of the mortgage situation is being carried out with the mortgage lenders, the minister said. He was writing each of the lending institutions.

CBRT Opposes Plan

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers (CBRT), representing 3,000 marine workers, has challenged a proposal from the 5,000-member Seafarers' International Union for a 10-year, no-strike agreement if a Canadian merchant marine is set up, Don Nichol-son, CBRT vice-president, said Monday that no union can commit its members to such a moratorium. "If they are unhappy or dissatisfied with their terms of employment, they'll strike anyway, regardless of what the union has promised the employers," he said.

Communications Parley

Provinces Reiterate Stand

OTTAWA (CP) — The third federal-provincial conference on communications opened today with John Rhodes of Ontario insisting the provinces remain unified in their demands for greater control over communications.

Following a pre-conference caucus of eight provincial ministers Monday night, Mr. Rhodes said the provinces had reaffirmed the common front defined at a similar conference in May. Alberta and Prince Edward Island were not represented at the caucus.

However, Mr. Rhodes' assertion that the provincial proposals are negotiable appeared to be in conflict with Quebec's stance.

And his declaration of solidarity came on the heels of Gerard Pelletier, federal communications minister, saying the provincial alliance would fall apart.

Mr. Pelletier was quoted in a Montreal newspaper as saying that divergent provincial interests would lead them to abandon the three so-called "consensus proposals" advanced in May.

UN Pressed to Seek Israeli Withdrawal from Sinai Desert

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Egypt is demanding new Security Council pressure for an Israeli withdrawal as its price for allowing the United Nations emergency force in the Sinai Desert to continue acting as a buffer between Israeli and Egyptian troops.

Egypt told UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim on Tuesday that it would not agree to renewal of the force's mandate when it expires July 24.

Egypt added, however, that "she is not against the proper use of the force. Egypt objects to its presence as a means to maintain the state of 'no way— no peace' and the perpetuation of the occupation of Egyptian territory."

Waldheim, after a conference with Egyptian Ambassador Abdel Meguid, said Egypt expects the Security Council to adopt a resolution "which will help to implement the previous decisions of the council."

These called for Israeli withdrawal from Arab territories it occupied in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war and an end to the Arab state of war against Israel.

Security Council President Alberto Cavaglieri planned to consult with other members, and a council meeting was expected in a few days.

"It is a serious situation, a dangerous situation," Waldheim told reporters. But he said it could not be compared with "what we had in 1967." Asked Secretary-General U Thant whether a new UN buffer force on Egypt's demand, and was followed.

The secretary-general said the 4,200-man buffer force, which includes Canadians, could not remain in Sinai unless both Egypt and Israel consented.

U.S. State Secretary Henry Kissinger, who is trying to negotiate a second Israeli-Egyptian agreement for a further Israeli withdrawal in Sinai, told a news conference in Minneapolis that Egypt's action "calls attention to the urgency of the problem and to the need of working out some new interim solution."

Israeli officials in Jerusalem viewed the action as a new attempt to pressure Israel into an agreement without the political concessions which Israel has been demanding of Egypt.

Spaceships Repaired

HOUSTON (AP) — The Soviet Soyuz spacecraft shifted into position for a cosmic linkup with an Apollo spacecraft ship on Thursday while astronauts and cosmonauts used a screwdriver, pieces of tape and bandaids for repairs aboard their ships.

After removing a stuck docking mechanism from a tunnel that will connect the two spaceships when they dock up, the astronauts relayed televised pictures of the tunnel to Houston Mission Control as they inspected it and found it in good condition.

Cosmonauts Alexei Leonov and Valri Kubasov lired their spaceship engine for 21 seconds and reported the manoeuvre was performed perfectly.

The Moscow Mission Control Centre reported the bench, aboard a Soyuz in a near-circular orbit of 137 to 139 miles above the earth, precisely where the cosmonauts want to be to receive the visiting U.S. astronauts at 17:15 p.m. EDT over West Germany.

The docking probe problem was discovered aboard Apollo on Tuesday night when astronaut Vance Brand attempted to remove it to open the tunnel.

He reported he was unable to undo latches on the mechanism with a special tool because the tool passage was blocked by an out-of-position connecting mechanism.

Houston Mission Control told Brand the problem was minor and instructed him to wait until morning to fix it.

The centre today radioed instructions to remove a cover plate with a screwdriver. Brand, after a night's sleep, did this easily and used a piece of tape to get the locking mechanism out of the way so he could release the latches and remove the probe.

If the astronauts had not been able to remove the probe, the spacecraft would not have been able to transfer between spaceships when they finally met up with the Russians. However, officials said they never had any concern that this would happen.

"I think we are all squared away now," Brand reported after the repair.

Brand, Thomas Stafford and Donald Slayton earlier conceded they had a problem involving a clogged urine-disposal system aboard the Apollo.

Aboard the Soyuz, Leonov and Kubasov were busy repairing one of their television cameras. It was to have televised their operation during a docking phase on Tuesday, but did not work.

Moscow Mission Control radioed repair instructions, the first set of which interrupted the cosmonauts' lunch.

As they worked, Kubasov asked:

"Can we use bandaids from our medical kit for insulating material—to insulate off the end of the cable?"

"Yes, Valri, you can do it," the ground replied.

Moscow Control Mission Control informed the astronauts of the successful rebuild change by Soyuz. Slayton remarked: "Superb. Great."

"They're there waiting for you," the U.S. capsule communicator said.

It was the second orbit change for Soyuz since it was launched from the Baikonur Cosmodrome.

Apollo also has executed two orbital shifts and plans several more as it closes in on Soyuz, which is serving as the target vehicle in the celestial chase.

About 3½ hours after Apollo blasted into orbit, an astronaut reported a "hitchhiker" aboard. The conversation went like this:

Apollo: We wanted you to report to the cape they put a hitchhiker aboard.

Mission control: Okay.

Apollo: We found a super Florida mosquito flying around here.

Mission control: (Laughter) Okay. Maybe you could think of a new experiment to do with him.

Apollo: I'm going to feed him to our fish.

Mission control: Okay.

The fish the astronaut referred to is a killifish, a tropical fish sometimes used in mosquito control projects. The fish is to be used in an experiment later in the flight.

Workmen this week began to install the two large storm sewers just below the College Street bridge. The city storm sewer project will cost about $475,000 and is expected to be completed by mid-October. The sewers will serve the entire northeast area of the city.

Crime Parley to Talk About Police Misdeeds

OTTAWA (CP) — More than 100 countries, many at odds with one another or experiencing some sort of internal conflict, will attend the fifth United Nations congress on crime prevention in Toronto.

Official observers will include not only the Palestine Liberation Organization, (PLO), focal of controversy in Canada, but eight lesser-known African movements.

Among the 2,000 delegates will be Angela Davis, a California Black Panther acquitted of murder in the slaying of a judge, and British author Jessica Mitford, whose book on medical experiments on U.S. prisoners quickly brought legal protections for the prisoners.

Among minor issues, the congress will try to gain agreement on capital punishment. A Canadian jailed on drug charges for 30 years in the Middle East would be returned to Canada to serve the sentence. And vice versa.

It also will try to gain agreement on an international code of police ethics. Police in an alien country no longer would sell the unsuspecting tourist drugs, then arrest and jail him for possession. This is only one of the exotic police practices that afflict the world traveller.

Some 2½ million people in the world's jails on any given day, a Canadian organizer says, and the use of torture in many countries is well-documented.

"The real controversy will involve the inhuman treatment of prisoners," the organizer says. "That's way up on the agenda."

Ontario Responsible Says PM

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau reiterated Tuesday that Ontario's Progressive Conservative government is responsible for inviting the United Nations' crime prevention congress to Toronto Sept. 1-12.

The congress therefore is become an Ontario election issue—an election may be held this fall—since Ontario Premier William Davis wrote Mr. Trudeau last spring urging that Ottawa not allow Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) observers to attend the congress.

Mr. Trudeau said the federal government must make this decision. But Ontario, having taken the initiative in inviting the congress, "should be mature enough not to wash their hands of responsibility."

Rival Army Forms

Angolan Capital Held By Warring Nationals

LUANDA, Angola (AP) — One of Angola's warring nationalist armies controlled most of Angola's capital today, but Portuguese military authorities said a rival guerrilla army of 3,000 men might be preparing to advance on the city.

After a week of nightly fighting in which an estimated 200 persons have been killed and about 1,000 wounded, Agostinho Neto's "Soviet-backed Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angolan (MPLA) had driven Holden Roberto's fighters of the National Front for the Liberation of Angola (FNLA) from all but a few pockets of the port city on the Atlantic Ocean.

The FNLA, which has Chinese support, has another 2,000 troops in Carmona, 220 miles northeast of Luanda. There have been persistent but unconfirmed reports that they were moving toward the capital, but their leader, Daniel Chipenda, was reported still in Carmona on Tuesday.

Portugal's leftist military government was considering flying at least 2,000 troops from Lisbon to reinforce the 24,000 Portuguese troops still in the southwest African territory, which is scheduled to become independent Nov. 11.

The troops' chief mission would be to protect the 400,000 Portuguese still in Angola. But so far all the fighting has been between the rival nationalist factions, and almost all the casualties have been Africans.

Only minor, sporadic gunfire Only minor, sporadic gunfire was heard Tuesday in Luanda, but fears of a siege by the FNLA touched off panic buying of all bread and canned food in some shops.

Chipenda, who defected from the MPLA with the 3,000 troops about four months ago, said in Carmona he opposed Portuguese military interference. He said the FNLA is "capable of taking on its own responsibilities."

Reds Denounced

LISBON (Reuter) — Tens of thousands of Socialists staged a protest demonstration in the streets of Lisbon Tuesday night, jeering Portugal's military rulers as "Communists in uniform."

The Socialists called for the removal of Prime Minister Vasco Goncalves, generally identified with the rival Communist party, and denounced Gen. Otelo Saraiva de Carvalho, head of the internal security force.

Mother Charged With Murder

ST. CATHARINES, Ont. (CP) — Judy Irwin, 29, was charged today with murder punishable by life imprisonment in the knife-killing of her 7½-month-old son in his crib Tuesday.

Niagara regional police said a weapon has been recovered.

Police originally reported Tuesday that Mrs. Irwin told them a stranger entered her home about 2 p.m. Tuesday on the pretext of wanting to use the telephone, locked himself in the house with the child, Jason Ross Irwin, and attacked him with a knife.

Move Rejected

TORONTO (CP) — An attempt by Ted Boustead (NDP—Windsor West) to amend the Ontario Labor Relations Act to give union organizers certification when a simple majority of employees sign union membership cards failed to gain support in a vote Tuesday.

After rejecting Mr. Boustead's amendment, the legislature's standing resource development committee voted to recommend the house accept Labor Minister John MacBeth's proposal to lower to 35 from 40 the percentage requirement for automatic union certification.

The major recommendation of the report included elimination of individual radio stations for each ambulance company. A central dispatch centre would handle all ambulance communications between Trenton, Picton, Napanee, Belleville and Madoc.

Gerry Bahr, author of the study said a second long range recommendation is "to amalgamate the management units of both firms." Mr. Bahr said the two Belleville operators agree generally with the first recommendations and "made no particular comment" concerning the second.

Mr. Meeks and Mr. Steele have until Aug. 12 to reply in writing to the study said Mr. Bahr.

The provincial spokesman said that by Aug. 20 the province expects to complete a manual of procedures and policies for the Belleville dispatch centre and that by Sept. 30 some cost — cutting measures will be implemented.

"We hope to have an adjusted level of service by that time," said Mr. Bahr. "We have to create some cost efficiency."

CEDUNA, Australia (Reuter) — After running 14,000 miles, halfway around the world, crossing Europe, the Middle East, India and Australia, English athlete Kelvin Bowers has been told his effort has all been in vain. His sponsors have run out of money. The Lads and Dads Club of Stokes-on-Trent had hoped to collect about 22 cents from citizens for every 100 miles he ran to build a sports centre. Now the sports centre has fallen through.

401 Gas Prices Questioned

TORONTO (CP) — Premier Davis is investigating the reason for high gasoline prices at service centres on Highway 401. The premier said he would have a reply soon for Fred Burr (NDP—Scarborough Riverside), who complained in the legislature that gasoline prices at the centres are between seven and 14 cents a gallon higher than at off highway gasoline stations.

Argentine Crisis Deepens

BUENOS AIRES (Reuter) — Argentina plunged deeper into economic and political crisis today after the second major devaluation of the peso in less than six weeks. As police were mobilized to protect strike-breaking workers the military watched the situation with growing concern. "This is chaos," a military officer said. "Things can't be allowed to go on like this."

Gasoline Rebates Taxable

OTTAWA (CP) — Revenue department officials said today refunds of the 10 cents a gallon excise tax on gasoline used for business will be treated as taxable income, contrary to earlier statements by Revenue Minister Ron Basford.

Ball Park Building Is Planned

By HARRY MULHALL
Staff Reporter

Tenders will soon be called for expansion of service facilities at Ulemite ball park.

Pressure for bigger facilities mounted this year with the entry of a city team in the Ontario Football League.

Tuesday the parks board and recreation arena committee approved the design of Morden-Guthrie, Belleville engineering firm, for a bigger building and authorized the calling of tenders.

The additions include public washrooms, bigger dressing-rooms and canteen services.

The new building won't have any windows, solving a vandalism problem, said parks director Lloyd Syer. Instead, it will fan-ventilated.

General Seeks U.S. Residency

MONTREAL (CP) — Dang Van Quang, a former South Vietnamese general and military adviser facing deportation from Canada, has requested permanent residency for himself and his family in the United States, the U.S. consulate here said Tuesday.

A spokesman said Mr. Quang's request made in a letter addressed to the U.S. state department. He refused further comment.

A report published in the Washington Star Tuesday said Mr. Quang's letter named two sponsors, Hollywood producer Sam Jaffee and Washington insurance executive Theodore Barker.

Supervisor's Protest Brings Suspension

TORONTO (CP) — A former Air Canada supervisor says handling of cash at the airline's Toronto and Dorval operations is so lax that he purposely took home a bank deposit bag containing $18,000 that had been left lying around at Dorval and didn't return it until it was proper for processing two weeks later.

Paul Dubois said in an interview that he was frustrated at the way complaints about security brought no improvement.

Mr. Dubois was suspended and fired by the airline, an action which the Canada Labor Relations Board upheld about a month ago.

He told the board's hearing brought out evidence that part of the reason for his being fired was that Mr. Dubois had come close to organizing other supervisors into a union.

He said the only reason he hasn't appealed is because he doesn't have money.

Mr. Dubois was a 10-year employee with Air Canada with commendations in his file from Yves Pratte, the president.

The only thing he concedes is "a terrible error in judgment" in making the protest a union matter. He said he should have let someone else in on what he was doing but he felt the security situation needed to be brought home to the company.

Kevin Jasmine and Margaret Koenka, who both worked in the cashiers' office at Dorval last year, said anyone could enter the room even though there were demon bags containing thousands of dollars lying around.

Since the demonstration by Mr. Dubois, a window was put in the cash control room through which chase other than cashiers are supposed to conduct business with the women.

"It didn't make any difference," Mrs. Jasmine said. "They'd reach through it and open the door."

"It's ridiculous, people in an out all the time."

Mrs. Koenka said loose bills were blown around by draffs through the door and more than once she found $100 bills in wastepaper baskets.

She also said RCMP at Dorval were supposed to escort her in making a deposit but she said they could get them to help. Instead, she would wait until her husband came to take her home and he would escort her with bags containing thousands of dollars.

Policy Changed

TORONTO (CP) — The CBC says it has learned that the federal cabinet will abandon its "Canada first" energy policy, Donald Macdonald, minister of energy, is to make a formal statement in the Commons today concerning energy. The CBC says natural gas shortages within the United States and Canada will be forced to share the shortages equally with its United States customers.

Housing Fine

TORONTO (CP) — The Ontario public housing field is in a healthy state, despite what the government's advisory committee on community sponsored and non-profit housing says, Housing Minister Donald Irvine said in the legislature Tuesday.

Last Friday, the committee said Mr. Irvine is "deliberately undermining" public housing construction.

Ambulance Cost-cutting Moves Coming in Fall

By COLIN BRUCE
Staff Reporter

Measures to cut the cost of Belleville ambulance service will be implemented by the end of September, a ministry of health spokesman told The Intelligencer Tuesday.

Last February, director of ambulance service Charles Brubacher said the cost of Belleville ambulance service is "high" and that a provincial study would delve into cost reduction.

Stu Meeks, representing La-Salle Ambulance, and Len Steele, representing City Ambulance, met with ministry officials in Toronto Tuesday to discuss report findings.

What a Catch!

Speed Limit Lowered

Complaints by residents about traffic on a west Belleville suburban street met with a decisive answer at city hall Monday.

The city's traffic committee decided to recommend that city hall institute a 25-miles-an-hour speed limit on Dunnett Blvd.

The recommendation came from Police Chief Douglas Crosbie, whose department conducted an intensive traffic vigil on the street following earlier complaints before the committee.

The results showed most motorists were considerate — the average speed was 24 miles an hour.

But, some exceeded 30 miles an hour. One motorcyclist was clocked at 55 miles an hour. There are 56 children living on Dunnett, which has no sidewalk police discovered.

However, the conditions, said Chief Crosbie, "strengthen my continued recommendations of sidewalks in subdivisions."

Dunnett arcs from the Quinte Exhibition Grounds into Palmer Rd.

Province To Check Water Level

Thurlow Township council has made arrangements with the ministry of natural resources to have representatives examine ways of raising the water level on the Moira River.

During an afternoon meeting with Leo Bernier, minister of natural resources in Queen's Park, Tuesday, Reeve Horace Casey expressed concern because the Moira River Conservation Authority would not repair or purchase the privately — owned Canniffon and Latta dams.

Complaints have been made that the dams need repairing to stem the heavy water loss, but the MRCA claims they have no right to work on the privately — owned dams.

Summer Peak Period For Emergency Ward

By AL ZABAS
Staff Reporter

TRENTON — Greater use of the emergency department at Trenton Memorial Hospital by town residents and Quinte vacationers doubles the department's case load from late May to Labor Day but does not tax its facilities, hospital officials say.

Hospital administrator John Lupton said Tuesday there is a definite trend to increased use of the department in summer months.

Department head nurse Ted Francis said his case load doubles between May 24 and Sept. 1 and adds that three-quarters of the increase in cases is due to people who are non-residents.

However, said Mr. Lupton, the work load is adequately handled by hospital staff and facilities.

His comments come in the wake of an indication that the Prince Edward County Memorial Hospital Board is hoping to double the size of its emergency facilities. Extension of patient care is termed necessary because of the need to accomodate area vacationers and to adapt to the trend of people going to hospital instead of a doctor's office.

Mr. Lupton said both circumstances affect the hospital here but Trenton is able to cope with the increased case load because demands on inpatient care decrease in summer.

People prefer not to enter hospital in summer and prefer out-patient treatment, he said. Staff, therefore is less in demand in in-patient departments and is adequate to emergency to cope with the rush, he said.

The administrator said that patient preference for ambulatory care is suggested in a recent survey of eastern Ontario hospitals. The survey indicates 50 per cent emergency, cases need immediate treatment, that is, either department staff or equipment.

Of that percentage half of one per cent were in "life and death" situations. Another five per cent were classified urgent — needing help within 15 minutes.

Mr. Lupton said he presumes that the remaining 45 per cent did not need emergency care and could have gone to a doctor's office. He said he was surprised at the survey results, having believed only 40 per cent of cases needed emergency treatment.

In summer, the trend of town residents to bypass a doctor's office is coupled with the needs of injured non-area vacationers for treatment. A tourist, with his own doctor unavailable, naturally thinks of the hospital for help, he said.

Vandalism Reward Raised

TRENTON — A ripple affect may have set in over an attempt by one downtown businessman to help stem vandalism in Trenton.

Bill Adams, owner of the Canadian Tire Corp franchise here, pledged Tuesday $100 as a reward for information supplied to police that would lead to the arrest and conviction of a vandal.

The money will be added to the $100 pledged by Trenton insurance agent Doug Whitley Monday.

Mr. Adams said the incidence of vandalism on the Canadian Tire property has been increasing. This year, 12 trees, have been broken.

In the last week, lighting fixtures behind the store have been broken. Earlier, someone threw several beer bottles through a sign face and damage was set at $1,200.

Mr. Adams complained that insurance companies have "gotten to the point where they're getting touchy" about insuring signs.

Nine Scouts Prepare For World Jamboree

TRENTON — Friday, nine boys from Trenton will be winging their way into what possibly will be the adventure of their mid-teens.

It's a month in Europe including visits to Sweden, Denmark, and Norway, where the 14th World Jamboree for scouts will be held.

The nine boys are either Scouts or Ventures in the scouting movement co-ordinated by the Trenton District Council, which has spent close to a year raising $9,000 to send the boys to the Jamboree.

Trip co-ordinator Bruce Moase says they will be leaving Trenton Friday at 1 p.m. to catch a plane in Toronto for Copenhagen, Denmark.

The main attraction in Europe is the 11 to 15-day Jamboree, located in Lillehammer, a camp site where about 15,000 boys from around the world will gather about 120 miles north of Oslo, Norway.

Nearly 1,200 Canadian youth are expected to attend, said Mr. Moase.

He said the Trenton youths have been prepared for the trip with a intensive weekend crash course on camping, navigation and first aid, skills at the Trenton council's Camp Alexy at Steenburg Lake.

"We got a list to tell us what they should have up on," he said.

The boys are Chris Avery, Tom Robinson, Philip Aubin, Mike Gray, George Moase, Gerry Crouch, Robert Goyetche, Lyle David and Arthur Maw.

Their trip has been made possible through an extensive fund raising campaign in which most of the Trenton council's 350 estimated youthful members have participated. Fund-raising events included from walk-a-thon, paper and bottle drives, auctions and tree-planting programs.

Water Wise

The Water Safety Theatre cast members Tigger Jourard and seated Catherine Cunningham illustrate water safety rules in a skit during Tuesday performance before 70 playground children at Trenton's Centennial Park. The four-member company, funded by a $18,500 Opportunities For Youth Grant is touring Quinte area playgrounds and camp-sites to tell children to be water wise and safety conscience.

Antique Car Buffs Gather in Picton

PICTON — Running boards and rumble seats will make a nostalgic comeback this weekend at Vince's Auto Owners Market on Bridge St. where the Antique and Classic Car Club of Canada, Upper Canada Region will hold a show on Saturday.

Mr. Gentile, one of the first members to join the club from this area, this week recalled the first show held here in 1974 as a fund raising project. A flea market was sponsored during the antique car display and more than $600 raised to better the group's sagging bank account.

Because of the success of last summer's show and sale, it was decided the popular event would be repeated. All club members contribute items for sale in the flea market as well as baked goods for a home cooking table.

Mr. Gentile says approximately 50 antique cars are expected here Saturday to participate in the exhibit. Trophies will be awarded for the car coming the longest distance and for the people's choice of first, second and third among the show's entries.

An antique car enthusiast for 13 years, Mr. Gentile owns six horseless carriages from bygone eras and says he enjoys the restoration work involved in his hobby.

He says membership in the auto club is steadily growing and now more than 100 persons belong to the club.

The display of antique cars planned for this Saturday will open at 9 a.m. and continue until 7 p.m.

Camper Missing

BLOOMFIELD — A Bloomfield area man is missing and believed drowned in British Columbia following an incident in an observation area near a whirlpool.

John Michael Pierce' 23 of RR1, Bloomfield, was on a camping trip last weekend with his brother Mark while on a visit to Vancouver when he toppled into the whirlpool that connects with strong rapids.

The missing man is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Pierce, of RR1, Bloomfield.

Horse Show July 27

PICTON — The Prince Edward Horse and Pony Club will hold a show at Picton fairgrounds Sunday, July 27 starting at 1 p.m.

A new event on the program is the buck race requiring contestants to ride bare back with dollar bills pressed under their knees. Horses and ponies are ordered through regular ring gaits and the last rider to keep his "buck" will win $5. All of the other dollars that drop during competition will be gathered for donation to the riding club.

Taxi Rates Increase

PICTON — Picton taxi owners this week announced rate increases to cover rising expenses but the price of in-town fares was not raised.

Cost of a town call remains at $1. with 25 cents extra charged for additional stops. Out of town calls were listed at 50 cents per running mile. Waiting time now is $8. per hour.

Early-morning Mishap Causes Heavy Damage

TWEED — A spectacular two-truck collision near here early today caused a total of $45,000 damage to both vehicles plus an undetermined amount of damage to their contents. Both drivers received only minor injuries in the mishap.

Madoc OPP said the collision occurred about 2 a.m. on Highway 37, about seven miles south of here.

Police said traffic on the highway was tied up for about three hours. The Tweed volunteer fire department was called in when leaking gas from one of the trucks covered the highway.

Driver of the northbound truck was 23-year-old Daniel Campkin, of Ajax. The truck, owned by J. F. Trucking Co. of Ajax, was carrying a load of lumber valued at $5,000.

Driver of the southbound truck was 25-year-old Christopher Moffatt, of Carleton Place. The truck, owned by Gardiner Transport, of Carleton Place, was carrying a load of metal tenting.

Police said the two trucks side-swiped and both trucks turned over. No charges have been laid in connection with the mishap. Provincial constables Derick Travias and Bill Reid are investigating the accident. Both drivers were taken to Belleville General Hospital and later released.

In Purr-fect Tune

This 1923 Studebaker owned by Vincent Gentile, of Picton is being restored by the antique car buff who enjoys tuning a motor almost as much as driving the finished product. He has painted this vehicle from the Flapper era vivd canary yellow.

The Price Was Right

PICTON — "Women's Lib" was not invented by the modern Ms but dates back to World War One says Picton businessmen Victor Lord, owner of Vic's Camera Shop.

Mr. Lord says he based his observation on descriptions of a farmers market held in Picton in 1916 when many of Prince Edward County's young men were overseas. Women did farm chores and took responsibility for berry patches, demonstrating their independence.

Red raspberries and "black caps" were priced at 10 cents a box with most of them picked by farm wives in the absence of their husband.

Mr. Lord's information, obtained from old newspapers and historical publications stated that blue berries were sold here for seven to eight cents a box in July 1916. New potatoes were offered on the market for 30 cents a peck and butter priced at 30 to 35 cents a pound. Eggs sold for 25 cents a dozen and honey for 20 cents a pound.

Detente in Space Cannot Cloak Main Political Objectives of Communism

By JOHN D. HARBRON

Foreign Affairs Analyst

Thomson News Service

Soviet writer Alexandr Solzhenitsyn has warned us about the insidious spread of communism since 1945, telling us that 20 nations have become Communist totalitarian states since then.

By way of proof of communism's insidious course, while the Soviet newspaper Tass takes the United States to task for constant references to nuclear war possibilities, is the spread of Communist parties in major European democracies.

In Portugal of course, the April, 1974 revolution which was supposed to bring democracy to that country after a very long right-wing dictatorship, has just about resulted in a new Communist one.

The Popular Democrats remain the only non Communist party in an almost fully disintegrated coalition of the left, now dominated by the Communists. Unbelievably Portugal is a 7in edge away from Communist rule.

In France, Germany and the Scandinavian nations, large and small Communist parties, growing in strength, talk about working within coalitions of parties of the left.

This of course is pure bunkum. Not a single example exists where Communists have maintained the coalition once in power. The end of the short-lived post-war democracy in Czechoslovakia by the 1948 Communist coup; remains the saddest example of how domestic Communist parties destroy coalitions in which they have promised to function.

But Italy, the Communists hav'e become the second most powerful party after the divided and tired Christian Democrats, a result of their success last month in nation-wide municipal elections.

In Japan the rise of communism has taken place in direct ratio to the decline in the Japanese horde and the resultant growing unemployment and inflation.

The Japanese Communists also play on the still-strong Japanese fear of nuclear weapons, the national policy not to build these and concern with nuclear power for commercial uses.

Just as helpful to the Japanese Communists has been Japan's recent recognition of the People's Republic of China and the increase in trade with Peking.

Britain, Canada and the United States, among the industrialized states, seem removed from the growing strength of domestic Communist parties, though some British parliamentarians and commentators are not sure of this.

Several of Britain's key industrial unions have a sprinkling of British Communist party members at the top and the policy intentions of extreme leftwing Labor members of Parliament are "not clear" to worry about the same.

Third World Communist parties often flourish, though small, by virtue of atrocious and slowly changing social and economic conditions.

They have been accused of domestic subversion because of their association either with Russian or Chinese communism. These connections come to light when a government expels members of embassies of Communist nations.

In the week that a Soviet and American astronaut planned to meet in space, on earth the Soviet program continues for the persistent advance of communism.

City's Bus Service

Belleville's bus service — is it, in fact, providing the best service possible?

Well, for one thing, there have been rumblings of late concerning curtailment of late-night service in the city. This brought a letter saying it was no way to attract new passengers or retain regular ones which the writer saw as the only way to help reduce the transit deficit.

"Providing better service should be the goal." .

And who would disagree with that?

Ears would be burning though if members of the transit commission and drivers could hear some other comments of the public.

Three women who are occasional bus users and who work in a downtown office were sounding off.

One major complaint: what's happened to buses marked "Quinte Mall?" One of the trio said she waited from 3.00 p.m. until 4.10 p.m. at the County building recently before discovering that Avondale-Parkdale is the bus for the Mall. Even then it can be a long haul if the route winds through suburbia.

It seems there are two buses on this route, one of them direct, the other roundabout. It would be a big help to everyone if prospective passengers were aware of this.

Even to those who are not bus users, it is apparent these vehicles move along at quite a clip, and it is the unwary pedestrian, venturing too close to the edge of the sidewalk, who finds himself having to step back smartly on occasions.

One of the ladies, this time in her own car, says she was forced across the centre line on Pinnacle one day, when a bus made a quick stop and was off again almost immediately.

This gave rise to yet another complaint, that passengers — and they were thinking of the elderly in particular — on sometimes jolted off balance as the bus moves off again before they can take a seat.

These are long hot summer days and it is good to see them, but the heat is trying for everyone other than in air-conditioned comfort. It is disturbing nonetheless to hear of bus drivers who are less than civil.

The job undoubtedly is a tiring one, monotonous too, the constant stopping and starting and maneuvering of the heavy vehicles in traffic, exacting. It's an important job though in that it involves dealing with the public — including visitors.

There is room for better public relations, with attention to little things. There is a small notice inside the bus about exact fares being required, but what about visitors to town who are unaware of this? There is room all round for making the bus service one that has the public interest at heart. This might include simple brochures or erecting new, more clearly-defined signs listing schedules and perhaps other tourist information.

Olympic Material ?

Sign on the wall of a soft drink plant in Belleville: "Let's Get Together and Support our Olympic Team." And sitting on the surrounding grass rim, right below the sign, the other day, two teenage boys taking their ease.

Anybody of Olympic material in our midst? It would be nice to think there is. There is a lawn bowler here who went to the Commonwealth Games in Christchurch, N.Z., and there is a weightlifter who would have gone but for an injury suffered shortly before.

We have yet to make a mark in the Olympics though. And, while taking a leap in the sun is about all most of us are fit for in this heat, it will not produce any athletes of the calibre we have in mind.

No Longer In The Red

Belleville's YMCA has literally been given new life.

The so-called "quiet campaign" spearheaded by city alderman Ben Corke raised $102,000 and retired the organization's capital debt.

Mr. Corke's perseverance in the project and the generosity of 312 contributors — including the Belleville Yardmen ($12,000) and soon-to-be-established Procter and Gamble ($2,000) — are exemplary accomplishments at a time when inflation makes people think twice before they reach for their wallets.

But now is no time for complacency on the part of the Belleville 'Y'. The organization has more than its share of critics and detractors.

A debt-free base should make a good foundation for a program that will make the YMCA more than 312 friends in the community.

Less Affluence a Blessing in Disguise?

United Church

At times we wonders if the media — press and radio — are not intent upon thrusting the dreaded depression down the people's throats.

They quote unemployment and inflation percentages and talk stridently about the depression's threat to this western world's high standard of living.

It sounds almost as if these so-called signs of an economic crisis are for deserved fault we've committed against the sacred principles of that cloyed-to-death, our present economic set-up. Press and radio sound almost glad, if somewhat depressed — as if the world is getting something it eminently deserves. All these threats of doom are so smug and so all-knowing.

Let's take a look at one of these threatened idols — the lowering of this western civilization's present high standard of living.

What's so wrong about lowering it? What would be lost? Certainly nothing that really matters.

We would certainly learn to be more discriminatory — to judge by quality, rather than transient fads — to cut out those things we may have, by now, accustomed to, but don't really need.

Some are already doing this wholeheartedly. Note the number of people who pause nowadays to conscientiously read contents labels, and compare ounces.

How very empty the store shelves would become if all the products which are simply overpriced, of foods and cleaning conveniences to save time and effort, were removed. The modern fast pace of living has made these products seem necessities.

With depression and work shortages, people would have more time and fewer so-called necessities would disappear. While none of these changes would work drastic differences in our standard of living, they would certainly reduce the sheer cost of living. Why not give it a try?

Perhaps it may help to lower the inflationary cost of ordinary necessities, such as potatoes, eggs, milk and sugar.

What's so wrong about lowering it? What would be lost? Certainly nothing that really matters.

We would certainly learn to be more discriminatory — to judge by quality, rather than transient fads — to cut out those things we may have, by now, accustomed to, but don't really need.

Some are already doing this wholeheartedly. Note the number of people who pause nowadays to conscientiously read content labels, and compare ounces.

How very empty the store shelves would become if all the products which are simply overpriced, of foods and cleaning conveniences to save time and effort, were removed.

The modern fast pace of living has made these products seem necessities.

With depression and work shortages, people would have more time and fewer so-called necessities would disappear. While none of these changes would work drastic differences in our standard of living, they would certainly reduce the sheer cost of living. Why not give it a try?

Perhaps it may help to lower the inflationary cost of ordinary necessities, such as potatoes, eggs, milk and sugar.

Awards for Rescue Work

Cornwall Standard-Freeholder

Our congratulations to the city and district men who received certificates from the Royal Canadian Humane Association this week.

Honored for helping to rescue three young women from a burning car last July were Sheldon Chisholm of St. Andrews West, Leighton McDonald of North Lancaster, Neil McGregor of Dalhousie Station, Que., Finlay McLeod of North Lancaster and Edward Quinn of St. Andrews West.

Honored for saving a man from drowning in the St. Lawrence near Summerstown last August was Brian Hunt of Cornwall.

All of these individuals showed great presence of mind and courage in effecting the rescues.

It is rare for a man to pass without someone from Cornwall and district performing an act of courage and heroism. Perhaps, at considerable danger to himself.

A week or ago, for instance, an employee of C.I.L. was travelling to Montreal when he saw a car plunge into a river. Gordon Fuller jumped into the water and pulled a woman to safety from the submerged car.

In the latter case, the incident occurred in Quebec and we are sure such action fast recognition might take. But we are sure Mr. Fuller saved a life and his reaction to an emergency was courageous and praiseworthy.

The Game's The Thing

Ulster Commentary

Wednesday, April 16, was a red-letter day in the history of sport in Northern Ireland. It was the day on which, for the first time in nearly four years, international soccer returned to Northern Ireland.

During those 'barren' years Northern Ireland, because of the disturbances, had to play its 'home' international games on Great Britain — very often in front of small crowds of almost disinterested neutrals. In spite of which, some highly creditable performances were achieved.

The team which broke the soccer 'barrier' was Yugoslavia, which volunteered to play the first leg of their European Championship tie in Belfast. It was a fine gesture and it evoked a warm response from soccer fans.

The Yugoslavs, world-class players who gave a good account of themselves in the 1974 World Cup finals, were given a tremendous welcome by 30,000 spectators in Belfast's Windsor Park. It was an emotional moment for spectators starved for so long of soccer at international level.

It was almost beside the point that Northern Ireland beat Yugoslavia by a goal to nil, though the cheer which greeted Bryan Hamilton's winning 'header' could might have been heard in Belgrade. The important point was that the game had taken place without incident of any kind.

It was a match well worth watching for its sportsmanship as well as for its skilful soccer.

Toronto Vigilante

Oshawa Times

A terrifying story came out of Toronto over the weekend. It was Toronto's report — better labelled bragging perhaps — of a 29-year-old North York man that he regularly rides Toronto's subways for a few hours each night looking for primarily young thugs harassing people.

Our hero, 215 pounds and a former boxer, says he regularly clobbers these lawbreakers when they won't stop whatever it is they are doing that he considers illegal, ranging from purse-snatching to smoking on the subway. He said he believes that there are quite a number of people like him who ride the subways for the same purpose, and asserts "if there were even more people doing this, it wouldn't be as bad a place as it is today."

No doubt this man, and others like him, mean well. Certainly anyone who sees three youngsters trying to snatch a purse from an elderly woman, as he reports he did, should stand by ignoring the whole thing.

But anyone who rides the subways looking for this kind of trouble, who sets themselves up as personal vigilantes of the law (vigilantes, or whatever they are called) is as dangerous to the principle of peace-keeping as the punks and thieves they beat up.

Y's Debt Cleared

Editor,
The Intelligencer:

How gratifying to read that the White Elephant of Victoria Street is now debt free.

The Herculean efforts of Ben Corke and "friends of the YMCA" were responsible for the raising of $102,000 to retire their capital debt. This milestone has been the reason advanced by the YMCA Board for persistent annual raids on the city tax chest. For years the Hockley Way Appeal, and the ordinary taxpayer has been lined by the YMCA's alleged poverty. Now all this is over.

Perhaps, now, with the settlement of this debt, the YMCA will once and for all get off the taxpayer's back, and, if management is unable to raise its financial trouble, they will always have the same "friends" who tossed in the $102,000 to fall back on.

Any volunteer agency that can so easily raise such a sizable sum as $102,000 has no right laying on the backs of the taxpayers for "operating" costs — so let us have no more of that nonsense.

WILLIAM C. HOCKLEY

Vermont Utility Institutes Plan for Levelling Peak Loads

The Globe and Mail

Ingenuity, adjustability, the capacity to step back and take a new look at an old problem — these are qualities useful in any situation, but that could be especially useful in tackling the growing problem of highpriced energy that threatens to be in short supply.

One of the difficulties, at any time, in meeting the demand for electrical power is that it is an uneven demand, and the system has until now been designed to meet heavy peak demand. The Central Vermont Public Service Corporation has started to experiment with a system that could level out the peaks, thus making it unnecessary to provide expensive new generating plants to provide more peak power. It is offering some of its customers the chance to buy power cheaply at off-peak times.

A customer who wants to try the new deal gets — at a price — a new electric meter with two sets of dials. The big dial is red and measures expensive kilowatt hours which cost 13.22 cents each. The bottom dial, in black, measures cheap kilowatt hours, at 1.65 cents each. There is a warning light which tells when the high-cost period is on.

One household, for example, found that it was good to cost her around $2,000 a year to run her all-electric home. She paid for the installation of the new meter system, and for the warning light, and still saved around $500 a year; but it means changing some of the family living and working habits, being conscious of the times when it is cheaper to use electric power.

Housework, when she used appliances, had to be transferred to the low-cost afternoon hours, while tennis and sewing fitted into the high-cost hours. Heating was more of a problem; she builds up heat during the cheap hours and turns it well down for the high-cost hours.

The idea of time-of-day rates with which Vermont is experimenting is being widely considered in the United States. The New York State Public Service Commission has scheduled hearings on the concept later this year; it is being examined in Michigan, Wisconsin and California.

Will it be considered in Ontario, where Ontario Hydro has tired of making an argument for large rate increases to maintain the old system of building to meet peak demand?

This is just one new idea. If we cleared our minds of old concepts and thought deliberately of the new and different, how many power and cost saving projects would be discovered?

She and her husband, Jack, took a bus load of country music fans to Nashville from the Stirling area.

County Museum Displays Chairs

By MARG HAYLOCK
Staff Reporter

PICTON — The town of Picton may be Prince Edward County's official seat but a museum display here titled A Seat in the County this summer shows a striking sit-down of Boston, Windsor and Bentwood.

A special collection of chairs loaned from Prince Edward antique buffs will be exhibited at the county museum in Picton. The display ends August 17.

Among the chairs is a Boston rocker circa 1850, a Victorian side chair and a Bentwood chair, circa 1880.

Museum curator James Gooding said purpose of the display is to illustrate chairs of the types used and made in Prince Edward and to provide an illustrated dictionary of chair designs from about 1750 to the latter years of the 19th century.

He adds that Prince Edward County is a clearly defined area in southern Ontario. It is located on the north shore of Lake Ontario about half way between the Niagara River to the west and the St. Lawrence River to the east. It was settled in the last decades of the 18th century first by United Empire Loyalists and later by craftsmen, farmers and industrialists who recognized the importance of Quinte " with its proximity to the new Canadian markets and the traditional markets in the United States.

Mr. Gooding says furnishings in Prince Edward County homes cover the fashions of the period.

"There was the wealth to acquire the latest designs, the craftsmanship to produce the latest designs and a wealthy rural population to retain the traditional designs," he explains.

Basic research for the display at the county museum was conducted by Charles Baird, a student of museum technology at Algonquin College, Ottawa, who is working here this summer. He was assisted by Donald MacDermaid of the county museum staff and Mrs. Jeanne Mishinick, historic furnishings consultant.

The display includes a collection of 23 chairs and rockers all fully described in a catalogue available at the museum.

Hot Potato and Cabbage Salad, spiced with pepper sauce, is a tangy, hearty accompaniment to steak or hamburgers.

Potato Salads: 14 Different Kinds to Try

If it's true everyone makes potato salad, it's also true that everyone makes it differently.

While they all contain the same main ingredient, the additions and methods produce widely different tastes. If you're a potato salad fan, you'll want to try them all.

The best potatoes to use, incidentally, are the small and waxy red potatoes. Boil them in their jackets, then peel while hot.

Potato and Herring Salad

two cups diced boiled potatoes
1½ cups diced pickled herring fillets
¾ cup chopped celery
2 cups cubed cooked one tbsp. minced parsley one tbsp. minced chives stix tbsp. sour cream
1½ tsps. lemon juice
¼ tsp. paprika
Chill. Serve in lettuce cups.

Sour Cream Potato Salad

three to four tbsps. French dressing ¾ cup dairy sour cream potatoes
two hard cooked eggs, chopped
½ tsp. onion salt
1/16 tsp. seasoned pepper

Blend French dressing and sour cream. Toss lightly through potatoes and eggs. Add salt and pepper. Taste. Add more seasoning if desired. Serve chilled on mixed greens.

Potato and Cabbage Salad

two tbsps. salad oil
½ cup chopped onion
4½ tsps. flour
4½ tsps. sugar
one tsp. salt
½ tsp. Tabasco pepper sauce two-thirds cup cider vinegar two-thirds cup water four cups shredded cabbage three cups sliced and halved cooked potatoes
½ cup raisins

In large skillet heat oil. Add onion and cook until tender, about five minutes. Blend in flour, sugar, salt and Tabasco. Stir in vinegar and water. Cook, stirring constantly, until mixture thickens and comes to a boil. Add cabbage, potatoes and raisins, mix well and heat thoroughly. Serves six.

Garden Potato Salad

¼ cup oil
two tbsps. wine vinegar four cups diced hot potatoes six radishes, halved
½ cup sliced green onions
¼ cup chopped cucumber
¼ cup chopped green pepper
two tbsps. chopped parsley
one cup sliced celery
two diced hard-cooked eggs
one small onion, diced

Blend oil, vinegar, Pour over potato. Set aside to cool. Add remaining ingredients; refrigerate. Serves six.

Beer-Potato Salad

½ cup diced onion three tbsps. salad oil two tbsps. flour
one tsp. salt
¼ tsp. pepper
two tsps. sugar
1½ cups beer or ale
¼ cup cider vinegar eight cups diced, cooked potatoes
½ cup chopped pimiento
½ cup sliced celery
two hard-cooked eggs, sliced

Saute onions in oil until soft and transparent.

Add next six ingredients (in order) stirring constantly to boiling point.

Simmer five minutes; cool.

Combine potatoes, pimiento and celery; pour dressing over mixture; garnish with egg slices.

Golden Salmon Potato Salad

one can (15½-oz.) salmon four cups diced, cooked potatoes
one small onion, chopped
two tbsps. finely chopped parsley one cup diced celery
one tsp. salt

Drain salmon and break into bite-size chunks. Toss lightly with potatoes, onion, parsley, celery, and 1 teaspoon salt.

Dressing

two tbsps. light cream four tbsps. prepared mustard two tbsps. sugar
two tbsps. vinegar
¼ tsp. salt
dash pepper

Combine cream with mustard, sugar, vinegar, ¼ tsp. salt and pepper. Beat until light and fluffy, and pour over salmon mixture. Toss gently until well mixed. Cover; let stand about one hour in refrigerator. Serve with greens. Serves six.

Potato Salad

two cups cooked, cubed potatoes
two hard - cooked eggs, chopped
¼ cup diced sweet pickle
¼ cup sliced radishes
¼ cup chopped celery
two tbsps. chopped onion
two tbsps. chopped green pepper
½ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. celery seed
¼ cup mayonnaise or salad dressing

Combine all ingredients and toss gently. Chill thoroughly before serving. If desired, hot cubed potatoes may be marinated in French dressing, then chilled, and added to remaining ingredients. Serves 4.

Tuna Potato Salad

Add two cups torn lettuce, ½ cup cheese cut in strips and one can (6½ oz.) tuna, drained, and flaked. Makes six to eight servings.

Rich Potato Salad

¼ cup salad oil
two tbsps. vinegar
1½ tsp. salt
four cups diced hot potato
two diced hard cooked eggs
one cup sliced celery
¼ cup chopped dill pickle
¼ cup chopped pimiento
one small onion, minced
½ cup mayonnaise
one cup ripe olives, pitted

Blend oil, vinegar, salt. Pour over potato. Toss, set aside to cool. Add remaining ingredients. Refrigerate.

White Wine Potato Salad

four large potatoes eight small new potatoes
½ cup Canadian white table wine
½ cup salad oil
three tbsps. vinegar
one tbsp. sugar
three tbsps. onion, chopped
salt and pepper

Boil potatoes in jackets until done. Peel and slice into bowl while still warm, moisten thoroughly with the wine. Add other ingredients. Allow to stand in cool place for at least one hour before serving. Serves six.

Ham and Potato Salad

1½ pounds potatoes
two tbsps. salad oil
one tbsp. chopped fresh onion one tbsp. fresh lemon juice
1½ tsps. salt
¼ tsp. pepper
½ cup chopped green pepper
1 cup chopped celery
one cup diced cooked ham eight hard-cooked eggs, diced
½ cup mayonnaise
Lettuce

Cook potatoes in boiling water, covered, until tender. Peel and slice. Add salad oil, onion, lemon juice, salt and pepper; mix well and let stand one or two hours. Add celery, green pepper, ham, eggs and mayonnaise. Mix lightly and spoon into a salad bowl lined with lettuce. Serves eight.

Marriage Break Ups

More Fathers Retain Custody of Children

TORONTO (CP) — Single-parent father Frank Roberts is finding out what the mother of his three children had to live through each week.

As part of a growing number of fathers raising their families after marriage breakdown, Mr. Roberts said:

"It's given me a whole new perspective on being a parent. I don't resent care for the expression 'single parent.'"

He said that a parent is a complete and total person.

He questioned the traditional assumption that the children stay with the mother after a marriage split, at the time he and his wife terminated their 20-year marriage.

The children also involved themselves in the decision while their father continued to stay on at the family's suburban Toronto home.

At that time the children went to their parents and said to them "haven't we (your children) got a decision to make too?"

Children over 12, in cases of custody litigation, are normally asked by a family court representative which parent they wish to live with.

Joy, 19, announced that whatever transpired, she intended to proceed with her plans to go to college.

Dave, 16, and Brian 15, opted to stay with whichever parent stayed in the family home.

And although they now live with their father, the three Roberts children maintain a warm relationship with their mother.

Mr. Roberts' decision to seek and secure custody of his children is part of a growing trend in the ongoing evolution of family living patterns.

The latest statistics show that in Canada more than 150,000 men are caring for 182,000 children, following divorce or separation and the numbers are growing.

But single fathers are facing difficulties. A study released this year on the lifestyle of 72 such men, conducted by the University of Toronto school of social work, showed the majority of fathers interviewed felt there was a definite bias against a male raising children alone.

The men said they have trouble getting and keeping housekeepers because neighbors gossip.

There were problems hiring female teen-age babysitters because the girls' mothers were afraid the single father might make a pass at the sitter.

Dr. Benjamin Schlesinger, professor of social work at U of T predicts that by the year 2000 children will be raised with men as much as with women.

He sees the trend of fathers taking custody as being directly related to the fact that more women are leaving home, and in some instances leaving their children with the fathers.

"Nowadays," he said, "it isn't as essential for mothers to stay with their children in order to prove themselves successful.

"Fathers, on the other hand, are faced with having to prove themselves perfect in that role, when they decide to seek custody of their children."

He added that because women are not now judged harshly for leaving home and children, another myth has been exploded.

"With more and more men assuming the responsibility of total parenting, it is becoming apparent that women are not the only ones who can effectively look after their children. Men are finding out that they can do this quite well."

He said he felt that good things were coming out of single fathers' involvement with children and home.

"Two generations ago, when many men worked at home as farmers, ministers or carpenters, children were able to watch their fathers at work. They could take pride in and identify with their fathers' triumphs and defeats.

"Today fathers are out at work all day and many children have little idea what they do. But these single fathers are once more able to influence and involve their families by example around the home."

Driving Advertised

PERU, Ind. (AP) — When Debra Bakehorn got her beginner's permit to drive a car, everybody in town knew about it. Her father took out an ad in the newspaper that said: "Warning. All drivers and pedestrians should be aware that Debra Bakehorn has received her beginner's permit (through an oversight). This has been a public service message."

Ban Lifted

CAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — President Idi Amin has lifted a ban on women wearing trousers because he said it benefits foreign tourists from countries where women normally wear trousers. A ban on wigs and miniskirts is still enforced.

Indians Decline

PUYALLUP, Wash (AP) — The Puyallup Indian tribe has declined an offer from the Bicentennial wagon train to dress in warrior costume and stage an attack on the covered wagons. Tribal Chairman Raymond Bennett dismissed the invitation to attack the train as a ridiculous insult to the Indian community.

Food Attacked

ROME, Italy (AP) — The World Food Conference came under attack by some women's international organizations for ignoring the issue of women's liberation on the farms. Delegates said they wanted a better look at women on the farms but did not know whether equal rights can penetrate the farms of the poorer countries.

Ann Landers

Friend's Diagnosis Angers Mother

Dear Ann Landers: A while back I read a letter in your column about hyperactive children. I have a dear friend who has a hyperactive child. She refuses to admit it.

I wrote to the Association for Children with Learning Disabilities (ACLD) for information when you printed the address in the column. I asked them to send my friend some reading material and enclosed her name and address.

Guess what the organization did? They sent her MY letter along with the brochures. Now my friend refuses to speak to me on the phone. When we meet on the street she turns her head and keeps on walking.

You, Ann Landers, are supposed to help people and look what you've done! Between you and the ACLD I have lost a friend of over 15 years.—Double-Crossed

Dear D. C.: Sorry about your friend, but her reaction isn't rational.

The ACLD sent the material because you asked them to. You asked them to because you wanted to help the child. Your former friend obviously does not choose to face reality and I feel sorry for her youngster.

Dear Ann: He is 41, an attractive college professor, divorced, with three children—the oldest, 15. The man has been active in "good causes" and is popular on campus. He has been in our home twice. One morning he came for breakfast and asked for a Scotch on the rocks instead of orange juice. I obliged. On his second visit he had a beer. I know nothing more about him.

Next month this man will marry my only daughter. (Her father died when she was nine.) The bride is 21, a student at the college. Any advice?—Her Mother

Dear Mother: Apparently your daughter hasn't asked for your counsel and you have wisely offered none.

To you, however, all I can say is this: Your future son-in-law sounds like an alcoholic and if his bride isn't aware of his problem now, she will be before long.

Keep the door open and the latch-string out, Mother. And don't rent her room.

Dear Ann Landers: I am troubled by some advice you gave recently. I hope when you hear my personal story you will change your stand.

I come from a large family. My parents have inherited money. They also have many relatives and friends and didn't want to leave out anyone—so there were 700 guests at my wedding.

Ushers handed out small scrolls saying, "Thank you for the gift. It was greatly appreciated." These scrolls went to everyone. I decided it was the best way to handle it. No bride should be expected to write 700 thank-you notes.

I hope you will print my letter and reverse yourself. People put a lot of stock in what you say.—Flak Rasca

Dear Rose: Sorry, dear. I don't care how many guests there were. Every person who took time and spent money on a wedding gift should have received a note of thanks in the mail.

Handing out scrolls indiscriminately without even knowing for certain if the person had sent a gift, was in very poor taste.

Communication Board Now Being Considered

OTTAWA (CP) — The third federal provincial communications conference entered its final session today with the chance for any agreement apparently hinging on whether Ottawa can grant the provinces a measure of authority without relinquishing any jurisdiction in the field.

Except for the more-militant Quebec—which announced that it now considers itself only an observer—the provinces agreed Tuesday to consider a new proposal for an informal council of communications ministers.

Federal Communications Minister Gerard Pelletier agreed to draft such a proposal overnight after some provinces complained that a federally-proposed policy committee was too formal. The council would act as a negotiating forum on national policy and power sharing.

Mr. Pelletier told reporters that provincial recognition of Ottawa's jurisdiction will remain a key to formation of the proposed council, as it had for the previously-proposed committee.

Croll Hits Plan to Cut Medicare

OTTAWA (CP) — The majority Liberal government was attacked from its Senate flank Tuesday when Liberal Senator David Croll emerged as a vehement critic of Ottawa's plans to cut its share of medical care programs.

The outspoken Ontario senator, a frequent thorn in the government's side, said in the Senate that his feelings "are somewhere in between" those expressed by Common Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield and former New Democrat Leader T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo Cowichan-The Islands).

"The leader of the opposition used the term betrayal and Tommy Douglas for the NDP said we were sabotaging medicare."

Finance Minister John Turner announced in his June 23 budget that Ottawa will end, in five years, the current agreement to split hospital and diagnostic insurance costs 50-50 with the provinces. A new agreement will be negotiated. He also announced ceilings on federal contributions to provincial medical care insurance plans.

Health Minister Marc Lalonde repeatedly has said the quality of health care will not suffer. The Progressive Conservatives, New Democrats, the Canadian Medical Association, and now Senator Croll, say it will.

Senator Croll said "medicare, hospitalization and the health care services cannot be sacrificed to our immediate financial problems."

Province to Ease Water Costs

The Point Anne water purification plant and distribution system should be in operation by the fall, says Reeve Horace Casey of Thurlow Township council.

He said work on the project will begin immediately based on assurances of provincial aid received Tuesday from William Newman provincial minister of environment.

The minister he said, assured him proposed legislation would pay 75 per cent of any amount in excess of $110 for annual water bills of a township resident.

"It would be a safe guess to say water for the homes will cost nearly $500 per year, based on the $80,000 construction estimate for the project amortized over a 15 year period," said Reeve Casey.

The province would then pay 75 per cent of the $390 over the maximum of $110 or nearly $250 yearly.

Currently, water is supplied to the homes by the existing Canada Cement Lafarge Ltd. system even though their plant closed more than 2½ years ago.

Point Anne residents have been maintaining the system until recently when it was simplified, thus reducing the necessity for constant monitoring.

Cost of the project has risen from the original $28,000 estimate and at a recent meeting some homeowners said they were considering abandoning the idea.

"We are quite pleased by the recent developments, said one resident. "But we hope it will go through."

Union Plans to Fight Cut in Bus Service

By COLIN BRUCE

The reduction of transit commission service will be a major area of bargaining during contract talks with city bus drivers this fall, says union chairman Hugh Kerr.

The commission is suffering mounting annual operating deficits and recently began an experiment to reduce service as a cost-cutting measure. Beginning June 30, drivers working the night shift began returning to the garage at 10 p.m. — two hours earlier than usual.

Mr. Kerr, chairman of Local 126, Canadian Brotherhood of Railroad Transport and General Workers described the service reduction Tuesday as "ridiculous" and that 20 of 23 drivers employed by the commission were opposed to the move.

The service reduction has meant the loss of one job and some drivers' schedules," he said.

Since the new schedule has been implemented, four drivers spend two hours sitting around the garage "drinking coffee" until midnight so that each will be credited with a complete, eight-hour week. The new schedule will not go into affect until mid-November following a mandatory two week posting of change required by the drivers' collective agreement.

Marylea Burtt, chairman of the commission, said during an interview, she can think in "ridiculous" and that 20 of 23 drivers employed by the commission are opposed to the move.

Project Outlined

Parks director Lloyd Syer describes layout of road and parking lot into outdoors winter recreation site to parks and recreation committees Tuesday. The area, with tobogganing and natural rink in old quarry, is south of Highway 401 and part of West Riverside Park development.

Bicycling Paths Suggested for City

Bicycling is a fast-growing pastime and where possible — pathways should be built to accommodate cyclists an Ontario government official agrees.

Although funds aren't available to build them province-wide, a municipality might receive provincial help with planning such routes.

The observations are made by F. Cederberg, director, safety and information branch of the transportation and communications ministry, in a letter to Margaret Wood, RR2, Consecon.

The letter was later received by Mayor Robin Jeffrey and wound up on the agenda of recreation-arena committee Tuesday.

Bicycle paths should be built where and where possible — because the number of adults — taking to bicycles is growing at an astounding rate," wrote Mr. Cederberg.

But build them province-wide would be costly and "funds simply aren't available" at this time.

However, the ministry will assist a local government in planning such routes. Providing there is a real and demonstrated need and the cost isn't astronomical".

Finkle in Hospital After Fall from Roof

Ray Finkle of United Rigging and Machinery Movers is in Belleville General Hospital today in the intensive care unit with multiple fractures to his elbow, pelvis, ribs and spine following an industrial accident in the city Monday.

He is listed in fair condition.

A company spokesman said today Mr. Finkle was installing a metal roof deck on the roof of a building at Union Carbide Canada Ltd., a plastics and chemicals plant at 421 East Dundas St. when he fell.

The spokesman added previous report; that Mr. Finkle was 30 feet above "exaggerated" but declined to release the height pending a report to the safety inspector.

Officials Want More Swimming Areas

By HARRY MULHALL
Staff Reporter

Need for more swimming and small-boat launching facilities on the city's Bay of Quinte shoreline has been emphasized to consultants now studying waterfront recreation resources.

The parks board and recreation-arena committee Tuesday underlined the needs as they approved in principle the interim stage of the Quinte Bayfront Study.

The report now is being circulated for reactions from local governments and agencies in the area involved — the south shoreline of the Bay, including the city, Thurlow Township and Sidney Township west to Aiken's Road.

Suggestions so far advanced by Ralph Crysler — of Toronto engineering consultants Crysler and Lathem — include emphasis on the need for more pleasure craft dockage in the city area. Among proposals are a yacht basin east of the present federal dock and adjacent small boat shelter off South George St.

Ald. Paul Russell, parks board chairman, said both groups should be concerned about swimming launching ramp facilities.

He was approval for a recommendation suggesting Mr. Crysler study:

— Launchigg ramps for small craft on the Bay front in east and west Belleville.

— Incorporate a swimming area in the suggestion for the George St. small boat basin.

Mr. Crysler said one possible site for a launching ramp could be the foot of Herchimer Ave., where a marine operation including launching railway — once existed.

In west Belleville there is a section at the bottom of Avondale Road that might be considered. But, his final report would also be involved with facilities at the Potter conservation property on the shoreline west of Belleville. And this could also include a ramp, serving the west end of the city.

Swimming facilities have been lessened in the harbor area with a recent city ban against swimmers off Victoria Park docks. Recreation department staff now already are examining a George St. site and should have a report ready next month, indicated recreation director Clifford Belch later.

Two Face Seizure Charge

A 31-year-old Trenton area man and a 21-year-old Brighton area youth will appear in provincial court here next ...sisely late this month and in September on charges resulting from the abduction of a 19-year-old female in Stirling July 1.

Ontario Provincial Police at Belleville said today James Stewart of RR 2, Trenton and Robert Wilson Rittwage have been charged with attempted rape and forcible arrest.

Stewart will appear for trial Sept. 16 and Rittwage will make his first court appearance July 28.

A Belleville detachment spokesman said Stewart was arrested July 6 near Sault Ste. Marie by provincial police there. Rittwage was located in the Cobourg Jail Tuesday where he is currently serving a six-month sentence imposed a week on two break-and enter charges from the Brighton area.

Director Surprised at Lack Of Interest in Art Classes

Youngsters in the College St. sector of Belleville may be given an opportunity to learn artistic basics for free.

Free sessions in art and ceramics are part of the city's summer recreation programs at two community school.

At Queen Victoria public school and Quinte Secondary School the lessons are run daily by the city recreation department in drawing, painting, pottery and a specialty — stitchery.

There are both closed and open sessions. The closed sessions are more advanced in techniques taught and cost a $2 for the summer — $3 to non-taxpayers.

The open sessions are for free and have always attracted good response since started several years ago, says Wilma Summers deputy recreation director.

This year, however, at QSS attendance has "been way down."

The drop is particularly noticeable at the afternoon sessions.

Last year, the class in the first week produced 37 youngsters, 67 in the second week.

One afternoon recently there were only two in attendance.

One reason for the drop in numbers may be that other recreation programs have been moved out of QSS this summer. Because of construction, archery and gymnasium and other athletic programs had to shifted to nearby King George public school. But the arts session had to remain at QSS. The kids needed the expanses it installed there.

The move has left QSS with a low recreation profile this summer. Fewer people — particularly youngsters — in the area are aware that QSS is any sort of program in progress, says Mrs. Summers.

"More would be interested if they knew what was going on," she said.

A Way with Clay

Recreation department instructor Debby Latouski has attentive audience as she talks about clay modelling at free arts-ceramics course at Quinte Secondary School, where registration hasn't been as high this year. However, paying attention are (from left) Lisa Destun, 7, Lori Waite, 8, Mike Dalpee, 14, Gina Ballotis, and Holly Reid, both 9.

Fence Issue Divides Parks Board Officials

City parks and recreation representatives learned Tuesday that vandalism and property damage problems have raised complaints among neighbors of the Belleville YMCA.

However, both the parks board and recreation-arena committee turned down a suggestion to assist financially with a solution to the situation.

The complaints came from householders whose homes are adjacent to the Y's sports field indicated a letter from D.G. Diamantides, YMCA executive director.

Meetings, initiated by the Quinte Information and Assistance Centre last month, discussed the problem.

One solution put forward was erection of a fence bordering the field, to protect the properties. Some six feet long it would cost about $3,072. It was suggested property owners about 12 — split the cost equally with the Y.

But, pointed out Mr. Diamantides, except for the a few jaggers the YMCA does use the field, or need the fence.

The facility is primarily used by the Hastings County Board of Education and the recreation department for outdoor programs.

But the YMCA — wishing to continue "harmonious relationships with all those concerned" — agreed to pay a third of the cost to the users.

A recreation staff comment on the request said area children appear to be making greater use of the field than department-sponsored programs.

Clifford Belch, recreation director, felt the bulk of vandalism involved youngsters in the area.

Ald. George Zegouski, recreation-arena committee chairman, felt there should be "some concern to ourselves because we do use the land."

However, vice-chairman Joan Guthrie objected strongly to the sharing suggestion from the YMCA and said it didn't "promote a very good image."

Ald. Paul Russell, parks board chairman, who moved against the proposal, said it was contrary to parks policy.

"We shouldn't be expending public money on private land," he observed.

Rec Site Improved

A road and parking lot will be built into a new recreation site now used for winter outdoors sports in northend Belleville.

The area is immediately south Highway 401 and is part of the ongoing development of Riverside Park.

The site now includes a toboggan area and a nearby abandoned quarry provides a natural skating surface.

Tuesday, the city parks board and recreation-arena committee approved an engineering layout of the road and parking lot.

The roadway into the site will be an extension of North Park St. The parking lot is designed for 50 cars.

Poole Gets $250 Fine

Gerald Poole, 31, of RR3, Trenton, pleaded guilty in provincial court Monday to dangerous driving, resulting in a $250 fine as well as being prohibited from driving for a year.

Poole was charged by Ontario Provincial Police at Belleville June 27 following a high-speed chase by a provincial police officer for about an eight-mile distance in the Frankford area.

Mitts Remanded

Donald F. Mitts, 20, of RR3, Frankford, pleaded guilty to a charge of dangerous driving in provincial court here Monday and was remanded to next Monday for sentencing.

Mitts was charged June 29 by Ontario Provincial Police at Belleville following a high-speed chase in the early morning hours in the Frankford area involving a 4½-mile distance during which several cars were forced off the road.

Highest Bid Gets Home

A Belleville couple has been awarded a home offered as part of a fund-raising project for the Stirling arena.

Wayne and Anne Cooney submitted a tender of $22,000, the highest of the three received by the building committee.

A $9,000-$10,000 profit was realized from the project, said Jack Bush, chairman of the committee.

The home was completed by volunteer labor and donated supplies.

Over a Barrel

One-year-old Brian Carson, of North Park Gardens, had the family car over the barrel Tuesday during gardening duties. The car, named Pebbles, waited patiently for a ride but the young gardener just didn't have the wheeling power.

Course Credit System Ends Summer School

Remember the days when one of your high school friends failed math and had to spend the first six weeks of the summer learning the xs and ys of algebra in order to pass into the next grade — it doesn't happen anymore in Belleville.

The credit system has all but eliminated the need for summer courses but the option is still available to Belleville students.

Acting director of education L.F. Reid said a Kingston high school offers courses and arrangements can be made for Quinte area students to attend.

Mr. Reid said the Belleville summer schools were phased out during the late 60s because school officials felt the credit system removed the need for these courses.

With the introduction of the credit system students who failed one or two subjects could still advance without missing a year. The student would simply repeat the credit course next year.

The introduction of the semester system in some high schools, has eliminated the need for summer courses, Mr. Reid estimated that only two area students would be taking courses in Kingston this summer.

Students interested in the course at the summer program can get further information from the Hastings County Board of Education on Ann St.

Alarm Box

Belleville firefighters responded to the following calls for assistance during a 24-hour period which ended at 8 a.m. today.

Tuesday, July 15, 8:22 a.m. fire in front of container box of garbage truck at 396 East Bridge St., slight damage, combustion probable cause.

Tuesday, July 15, 4:38 p.m. — fire in chimney of incinerator at Regency Apartments at 73 Victoria Ave., no damage.

Safety Counts

In construction, there's one thing more important than getting the building up . . . and that's getting it up safely. The Construction Safety Association of Ontario arrived in its caravan trailer at the Century Place project Tuesday evening to refresh workers on safety practices and provide insights into updated safety techniques and equipment. Here project superintendent Allen Derreriss (left) gets a first-hand demonstration on safety boot requirements from association representative John Blogg.

Newfoundland Doctors Are Unhappy with Pay

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — Newfoundland's doctors say they are not happy with the current fee structure under the provincial medical-care program, known officially as the Newfoundland Medicare Commission.

At its annual meeting, the Newfoundland Medical Association (NMA) expressed dissatisfaction with a new agreement calling for a 13-per-cent increase next April 1.

The increase was based on the total amount of money spent on providing doctors services in the province and will be distributed on an over basis with doctors having the greatest operating expenses receiving the largest percentage of the increase.

The fee increase applies to physicians in private practice.

Dr. J. Douglas Wallace, general manager of the Canadian Medical Association, told the delegates he was surprised salaried doctors in Newfoundland are doing so well.

These doctors, employed by the province mainly in outport communities, recently had their pay scale revised to range between $29,000 and $49,000, depending on experience. It previously ranged between $21,000 and $43,000.

But some physicians in private practice feed that their professional compatriots working in cottage hospitals or employed directly by the government are earning more money because they have no overhead expenses to contend with.

Private practitioners have wondered why they have no pension fund like the government doctors and also why they shouldn't be paid on the basis of experience also.

NMA officials say that when the time comes to negotiate, the government may find the physicians a bit tougher to deal with.

Dr. Wallace says the CMW plans to acquire the services of experts in the labor field when negotiating new contracts with government.

Dr. C. U. Henderson, past president of the NMA, said a committee has been established to meet with medicare officials for any further negotiations.

He said the committee will ensure that matters will not be left "to the last moment" when contract talks come up in future.

Keep'em safe on the home and cottage front!
